"HAMPTON COURT" sterling, protected by bags of Pacific Silver Cloth

Amazing cloth keeps your silver BRIGHT

WITHOUT POLISHING

Now tarnish can be prevented. Sulphur fumes in the air blacken silver because they react chemically with this precious metal. Polishing actually removes some of the silver itself from sterling or plate.

But Pacific Silver Cloth prevents tarnish from forming because it traps the gases in the air before they reach your silver. This unique fabric is impregnated with tiny particles of silver which absorb the attacking gases . . . keeps your silver bright as when you put it away. House Beautiful magazine editors and decorators regard Hastings Square furniture as being so newsworthy and so praiseworthy that they selected groupings for their 1952 Pace-Setter House! Next month's issue will give you the complete story, in words and pictures, of Hastings Square as interpreted by this magazine's own editors.

Hastings Square

...fine modern furniture designed and built to fit perfectly our American way of living

Here, at last, is furniture specifically designed to meet all the complex demands of modern American living. The way you and other Americans like to live determined many of the exclusive features of Hastings Square. Using a beautiful native wood, "Enchanted Walnut", our craftsmen produced this collection for living room, dining room and bedroom... each detail conceived and developed by Mr. William Pahlmann, one of America's greatest designers. You'll like the way Hastings Square suits itself to small quarters and "grows" with the addition of more pieces as income or family expands. You'll like, too, the way pieces of this group make themselves "at home" when added to existing room furnishings with either modern or traditional feeling. Multi-purpose pieces... mobility... imported teak wood accent pieces... adaptability... all are features encouraging you to see Hastings Square at your dealer.

Hastings Square furniture is manufactured by the makers of famous

William Pahlmann, one of America's most respected designers, has his talents for interpreting the needs and likes of homemakers reflected in each piece of Hastings Square furniture. His talents, teamed up with those of our meticulous craftsmen, will make you continually happy with your Hastings Square selections.

This formula cannot be applied to a concert and particularly not to a recital. Most pianists, violinists, and singers feel it incumbent upon themselves to begin their programs with something difficult and "artistic," some, old piece of music, some dry piece of lace. This impresses the critics, absolves the artist's conscience in his duty toward antiquity, and gets the whole matter over with before most of the audience is properly seated for the performance.

After that the first major work of the evening is played. After the intermission the program becomes lighter. It ends with a blaze of fireworks to be followed by some additional small Roman candles in the form of encores. This is the classic construction of the recital, and don't ask me why it is so. It seems to me that a recital ought to start with a brilliant bravura piece to warm up the audience and then, excitement and good feeling engendered, is the time for the presentation of the more austere music to them.

However, I must be wrong, since hardly anybody does it that way.

Artur Schnabel, a great pianist whose programs were distinguished by their uncompromisingly high demands on an audience's attention, used to say that the difference between his recitals and the other pianists' was that his recitals were boring even after the intermission. The moral is that one has to wait and give the concert a chance.

ON THE other hand, I am often tempted to leave after I have experienced the great emotion, after the Beethoven sonata has spoken to me and I have given it everything I have to give. I must confess that I don't go home. I remain because I am afraid of missing something. Would you have the courage to say "enough" and go home when you are spent? I admire you if you do. You might arrive home with a more vivid impression of the music and more profit from the concert.

I do not find most program notes helpful. They are either too technical or too nebulous. I see no point in the writer's telling us (I quote exactly), "There is a free ything that counts, for the moment at least, is how you yourself feel about the music or the performance. You may change your mind later on. As to your present opinion, you can always take refuge in the fact that the critics themselves disagree violently, occasionally, about music which one would suppose to have long been accepted as standard and very often about the performance.

This is not a sign of ignorance; it is, like your own reaction, a sign of music's subjective character.

MOST people who are but casually interested in music enjoy best the full orchestral concert and respond easiest to the drama and excitement which eighty men and a conductor can produce. Piano recitals rank second in popularity, singers third, and violinists fourth.
The orchestral concert with a soloist is the most popular.

There remains one controversial point about concertgoing. Stern mentors of our tastes have said that we glorify the artist too much.
We pay too much attention to the virtuoso, and we would be better advised to choose music rather than the musician. I think not. I think it is the artist who represents the music for us. It is through him that music comes alive. It is he or she who makes concertgoing an exciting experience. Therefore if you have favorites let them continue to bring you out of the house and into the hall. But you really ought not to prejudge a program and conclude before hearing it that this week's selections will bore you and next week's will not. Great music performed by a great artist is obviously the ideal combination, one which fortunately it is not difficult to find these days.

How to store maps and charts

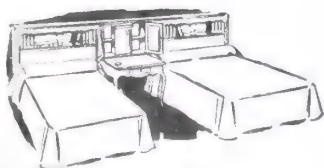

The problem of storing oversized maps and charts, yet having them accessible, may be solved by hanging them on the inside of a closet door. Cover the top of the maps with a section of half-round molding, held in place by two small screws. Maps may then be flipped over (see sketch) for easy reference. When not in use, a hinged, hardboard panel, closed by two hooks, will keep them neat and out of the way.

A disappearing snack table

What might have been useless wall space has been put to work in a hinged-down snack table designed by Milon Hutchinson. In place and supported by its one leg brace, it makes a convenient spot for breakfast or a midday snack for one or two persons. Yet it does not interfere with work area of small kitchen.

Other occasions, such as party preparations going on, this versatile affords an extra table surface, always handy when the kitchen is small. Because it is near the living room, getting from it is quick and easy, too. It doubles as a check when listing supplies or checking bills.

When not in use, the table hinges up to conceal shallow wall shelves and their contents. The leg brace hinges back against the under side of the table, so there are no protruding parts. Now it is flush with the wall, takes up no floor space whatsoever. Here is compactness with multiple use when, and as, needed.

If you approach Italy from the Mediterranean—on one of the Italian Line's Sunny Southern Route cruise crossings, for example—you have this advantage: You can reverse the usual procedure, work your way up, not down the boot, and begin with what many Italophiles consider the best, the island of Sicily. For here is an island not merely blessed with dazzling sunshine, exotic scenery, interesting native foods, wines, and customs. It also has handsome Mount Etna, capriciously waving its cloud plume against the intense Mediterranean sky. And, antedating Athens as a center of early Greek culture, it records its awesome history fully and accurately through relics of idyllic beauty. Ancient temples gleam snowily against the sky. Limestone roads rutted by Roman chariot wheels lead into an amphitheater where the crowds screamed as Christians were fed to the lions. Sappho sang here. Saint Paul preached here. At Palermo, your hotel may be Utveglio Castle, high above the harbor on Mount Pellegrini, and you will visit a twelfth-cen- (Continued on page 295)

WHAT IS HAPPENING TO AMERICAN TASTES?

America is entering a new and exciting era of Free Taste. Americans are declaring their independence from the dictates of convention and achieving open-mindedness and freedom from rules and clichés.

For a decade we have been cautiously finding beauty in new forms, discovering some merit in new ideas. Now we have developed confidence in our common sense, in the quality of our own taste. We have become expert at creaming the world for the best.

We are not throwing out the things we used to like. Rather, we are adding our new loves to our old loves. Only when the new thing does a better job do we discard the old. But many of the new things are better. For modern designs have matured and acquired beauty and grace. So we are mixing the best of the past with the best of the present, creating a free, new look.

You will find in this issue a record and forecast of American taste—your taste. Everything shown here illustrates the opening stages of the new 10- to 15-year cycle in American style. All through the magazine you will recognize your own preferences, because you, and only you, are dictating American style.

THE NEW TASTE

Watch for these new characteristics—in your own preferences

—in the new possessions of your friends

—in the 53 pages that follow

- 1 Watch for the domination of architectural design over the interior furnishings which is causing us to prefer quiet, unornamented design in furniture. You might call this the domination of the container over the contained.

- 2 Watch for the gradual disappearance of the opaque exterior wall and the arrival of the lightened glass wall—with the resultant flowing together of indoors and outdoors and the visual extension of the room beyond its real limits. This means the decline of the boxy room, with its four walls and ceiling alike in materials and finish, and its exterior wall punched with holes for light and air.

- 3 Watch for a pronounced shift in taste in materials and colors following the new indoor-outdoor relationship. To prevent a sharp line of demarcation between indoors and outdoors, we are using colors and materials inside our rooms that blend with those of the outdoors. Some people are using outdoor furniture both inside and out, so they can still further merge outdoors and indoors. You also see a great increase in the interior use of stone, brick, and natural wood surfaces.

- 4 Watch for the great popularity of nature colors in both indoor decorating and outdoor use. These are the colors found in the landscape: in foliage, soil, bark, rocks, and grass. This has been a pronounced trend for the last three years, and shows all the signs of becoming still more pronounced. (See HOUSE BEAUTIFUL, November 1949, January 1951, November 1951.)

- 5 Watch for the strong trend toward textures—either real textures (as in natural materials) or illusionary textures achieved by multitone effects in weaving or printing. This widespread preference for textures in all materials—architectural or furnishings—is one of the most pronounced characteristics of the new trend.

By ELIZABETH GORDON

Editor

6 Watch for color schemes composed of low contrast colors. Some of the most popular are monochromatic. High-contrast color schemes are waning.

7 Watch for furniture that resembles, in appearance, architectural "built-ins." This tendency is to be found only in furniture that stands against solid, opaque walls. (Pieces that stand in the free space of a room, or stand in front of glass walls, have quite different characteristics.) This "built-in" look applies to both upholstered seating and storage pieces such as chests, cupboards, etc.

8 Watch for, in free-standing furniture, flowing, sculptured lines and transparency of construction (like open caning and spindles). The new chair, table, stool, or bench which stands in open floor space does not seem to block or fill its space. This trend toward graceful beauty is one of the most exciting of all the new characteristics, and is producing the finest furniture in modern design.

9 Watch for the increasing importance of outdoor spaces around the house—for real use in good weather and visual use in poor weather. As our houses shrink in size (with rising costs), it becomes even more necessary to make them seem to be larger than they are. As a result, all kinds of living requirements are being fulfilled outdoors: eating, entertaining, playing or resting, and storage. Every day, people are finding new uses for the land outside their houses. As a result, a revolution is taking place in how we develop both our houses and our land.

10 Watch how people are exercising FREE TASTE, mixing good things, regardless of the rules. They are bringing together things they like from all periods, all countries, and all cultures. This means the end of attempted fashion dictatorship, of rules about "authentic" combinations, of doctrinaire cults loaded with do's and don'ts. Anything good goes. This freedom is producing personality and character in our homes as never before, and it spells the death of the stereotyped, rubber-stamp formula. This is the single most exciting, most promising characteristic of the new era that we are now entering.

For a full description of this highly important FREE TASTE attitude that people are taking toward their homes, turn the page

FREE TASTE

the American style of the future

By Joseph A. Barry

Author of Left Bank, Right Bank and commentator on American and European cultures

Unheralded, the second American Revolution is now taking place. Unknown to each other, individuals are writing another Declaration of Independence—this time from the would-be dictators of the American home. Quietly and privately, people in every class all over the country are hammering out a philosophy of individualism. Like the Frenchman who discovered he had been speaking prose all his life, they are discovering that they have been practicing free taste

Such was my experience when Boris Aronson, Broadway's finest scene designer and one of America's great painters, came to Paris recently and I met him for the first time.

"I'd like to show you our paintings," I told him, "but I warn you, they are by no one you ever heard of. You'll see dozens of canvases by unknowns—most of them young painters—sometimes crude, but always interesting."

"Wonderful!" Boris exclaimed. "The best collection I know is a doctor's collection of old locks. Those locks made more beautiful abstract forms and compositions than most of the so-called modern abstractionists."

"Picasso is a great artist, but people are not collecting his art, they are collecting his name. There is nothing more harmful to painting or to America than name collectors. Anyone who looks for quality in an object and not for the name of the artist is exercising what I call 'free taste.'"

Boris Aronson told us about some of his own experiences. When he was designing the sets for Cabin in the Sky, he took a trip through the South looking for ideas. In one shabby hotel room, he said, he found two girls who had taken a multicolored poster advertising Cab Calloway, had cut out various letters and had rearranged them into a new, abstract pattern on their wall.

In another place, a family with no money for paint or wallpaper had used free samples of wallpaper to decorate their room in a sort of mosaic pattern. It was one of the most exciting things, Boris said, he had ever seen. "Without being conscious of it, they were artists, because they had free taste and courage."

All over America these days, you meet more and more people who have the courage of their tastes. They are rising like the tide, silently, invincibly, and taking over the direction of their own homes and their own lives.

There are no battle cries. They wear no uniforms. They sport no buttons reading "I like Wormley" or "Robsjohn-Gibbings to redo the White House." They don't believe in being uniform. They don't believe in buttons or in names. They are today's happy warriors. They believe in one thing: free taste exercised by free men.

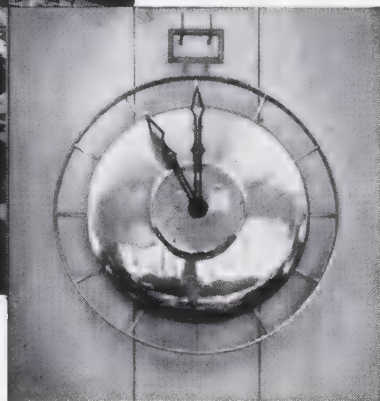

They have tasted freedom. They have tested their strength in the game of self-reliance. They will never again be led on a ribboned leash. The errors they make are their errors—and the beginning of a joyful wisdom. The life they lead is their life—and nothing is richer.

*Free taste is pure joy. Nothing compares with the pleasure of those who have discovered it.
If you know (or can imagine)
—swimming in rough seas;
—soloing a plane for the first time;
—creating a new recipe or a variation of an old recipe;
—playing an instrument;
then you have some idea of the exhilaration of playing your mind against the leaders of the passive crowd, —against their clichés,
—against their stereotyped thinking,
—against what "they say" you should do.*

This is free taste in operation: To design and make a needlepoint rug, to use it in a room with batten walls and a beamed ceiling, to contrive an original electric clock by inverting a brass bowl, to call on a carpenter to fashion not just a set of wood shelves for bric-a-brac but a pattern of niches. Its greatest cost is the courage it takes to follow your own inspiration. The conversion of bowl to clock, for instance, costs as little as $30, including works and workmen's fees.

them, like someone in a giant parade, you can't possibly know your number unless you traveled, as I have recently, across the country and remarked the many in revolt.

To the arbiters of conventional—and questionable—taste who decree, "Be Georgian," "Be Louis Quinze," "Be Roosevelt the First," you have been answering with your actions: "Be Yourself." You are winning a bloodless victory. The enemy, you are finding, has no blood.

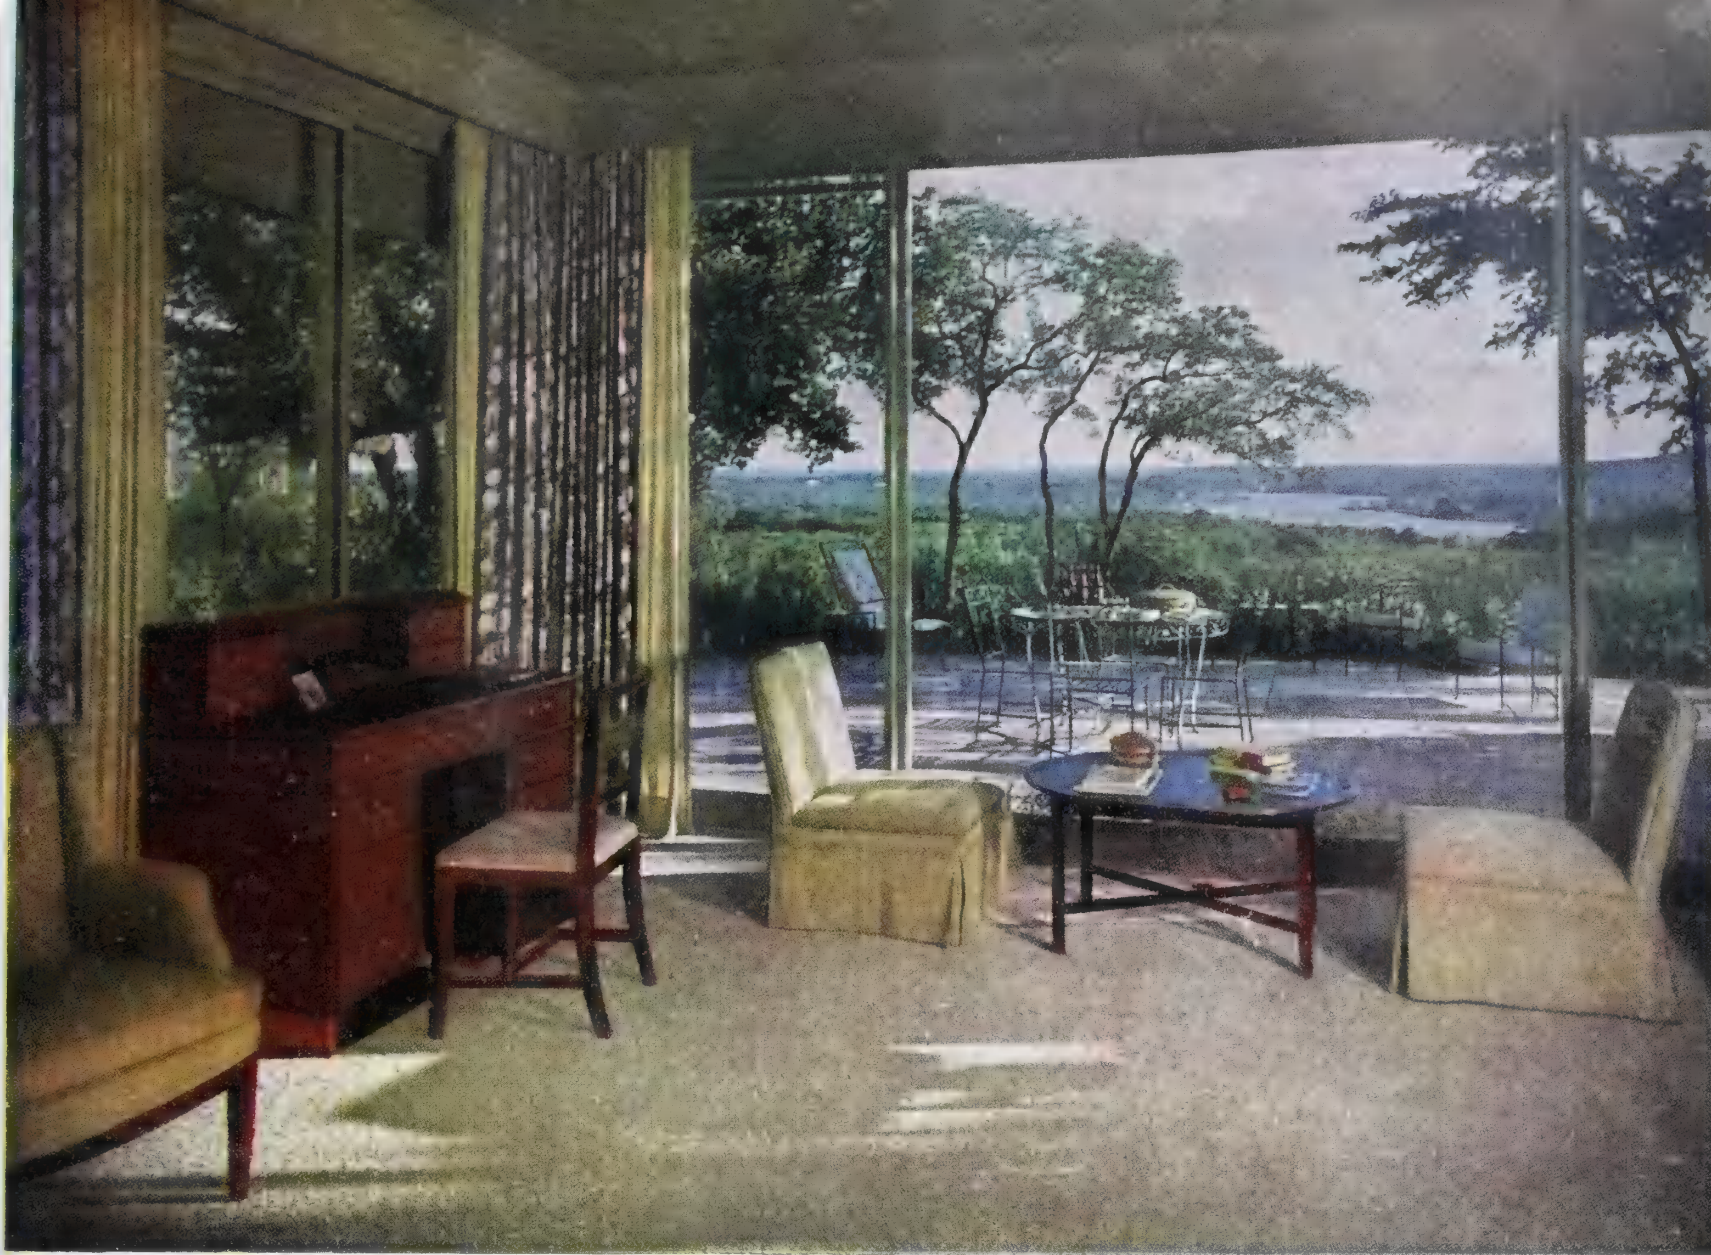

The taste trend to naturalism (first reported on in HOUSE BEAUTIFUL in the January 1951 issue) is inclining Americans to be natural themselves. The return to nature is teaching them to use their own eyes and their own judgment. They are exploring the infinite variety of the landscape, delighting in the free play of textures and forms in the world about them. There they have found the answer to our era's central problem: How to be an individual in a society dependent on mass-production.

The answer is: Like life in nature, you must give your personal expression, your taste, free play—or you will emerge like an end-product on an assembly line of canned culture. You can use anything, whether mass-produced or handmade, if you choose, with free taste. Otherwise, your life will become as (Continued on page 180)

From Naturalism Comes Freedom

For the last six years, HOUSE BEAUTIFUL has been watching taste trends as they reveal themselves through a careful analysis of such factors as what sells best in furnishings, the architecture of new houses, our social manners. Early last year we called your attention to the trend toward naturalism. Now we are reporting on the new sense of freedom, freedom of taste, which flows from naturalism.

In the natural universe, Joseph Wood Krutch pointed out to our readers last November, every individual leads his own individual, unique, and rebellious life; not even two leaves are alike. Only those who consider man an organic part of nature can believe in or exercise freedom. Any other conception must end in accepting a totalitarian order which regards and treats man as a machine, easily manipulated and mechanically satisfied. Crucial to the life and death struggle between the two conceptions is the stirring return of America to naturalism and the natural way of life, to the freedom of living beings. The age of fixed taste and machine forms has come to an end.

The Frank Duvols of Austin, Texas, freely combined the charm of antiques with modern, glass-walled living. Why give up such a view just because you like antiques!

With a cheap "chromo" picture and a sponge dipped into cold-water paint, one couple successfully decorated their drab cabin wall. Spending much more, the cautious get less. They never heard of "trompe-l'oeil," or artistic illusion, but this colored family achieved it. They "made" a scenic "mural" with scraps of wallpaper and cut-outs from magazines.

COLORS OF THE LANDSCAPE

Here is a bird's-eye view of what people have bought and will continue to buy—colorwise. It is a statistical chart showing what colors people want, as revealed through five million dollars of custom-mixed paint sales of The Martin-Senour Company from May 1, 1951 to May 1, 1952. This chart reflects with great accuracy the best-selling colors in other parts of the current home furnishings industry. For other best sellers either repeat, harmonize, or combine with the colors appearing on this chart. This chart's significance to style forecasting lies in the fact that the colors of the furnishings people have bought recently and now own will affect what they buy in the future.

Modern design is entering a new period of great beauty, in which rounded, flowing lines are superseding the sharp, geometric lines of early Modern. The values of humanism are, once again, strongly influencing modern design.

Tastes today are changing very fast. What you liked before Pearl Harbor tends to be different from what you like now. Since previous taste cycles in this country have lasted about 40 years from beginning to end, this means we are well started on the up-curve of a 20-year period, which should reach its high point between 1960 and 1966.

For the past four years, HOUSE BEAUTIFUL has been taking yearly "soundings" in both the direction of change and the rate of change in public preferences. Operating on the theory that if we could know the colors, patterns, and forms of what people are now buying, we would be able to foretell a great deal about their tastes in the future. For what you now own affects very substantially the style and color of what you buy in the future, since you want to make your new possessions mesh and harmonize with your old possessions.

To this end, we have surveyed the characteristics of nearly three billion dollars of retail sales in the home furnishings industry to find out which things are the best sellers—the winners in the race to attract the consumer's dollar.

One of the key facts we have learned from these continuing surveys is that there is an over-all unity and direction in the character of people's postwar tastes and wants. People like some things for the past, but they also want to live twentieth-century lives. They want to live modern—but they don't want to be strict or doctrinaire about it. They want the best from all times. They want beauty, but also performance. When a better thing comes along, they are willing to adopt it—even if it means throwing out an old thing before it is worn out.

Americans are very quick to accept changes and improvements caused by scientific advancement. Many new standards of what makes superiority in a house or a home have been created during the last decade. The superior house is marked by a beautiful and useful site, fine architectural design, highly engineered and complex systems of comfort, acoustics, lighting. This same change in attitude has occurred in other fields. The privileged child is no longer distinguished by lace, ribbons, and a four-yard-long, embroidered christening gown. His clothes are very simple, but he has the best in (Continued on page 269)

The growing love of SOFT, ROUNDED FLOWING FORMS

By Mary Roche

We are discovering new beauty in sculptured contours. We have developed a taste for forms with gently flowing curves in preference to those built up from boxy, geometric masses. Easy, natural grace is taking the place of rigid geometry. The pendulum of taste can swing no farther in the direction of forms stripped down to bare essentials. It is now swinging back—but not toward a revival of ornament. The new richness is expressed in softness of line and subtlety of detail. Instead of applied decoration we have shapes that swell and taper, that are bowed here, hollowed out there, or bend obligingly to fit the human body. Often they are asymmetrical. This is the kind of form your fingers delight to feel—whether you find it in the arm of a chair, the handle of a fork, or the curve of a plate. These are forms you rarely tire of because they look different every time you see them from a different angle. You rarely see them exactly the same way twice.

GRACEFUL, SCULPTURED FURNITURE

As our rooms become less boxlike and exterior walls fade into transparency, there is less solid wall for furniture to back up against. Some of it is moving into the open where it must look well from every angle, must not seem to block the vision. For these free-standing pieces, our taste turns to flowing lines, transparent materials like open caning, transparent effects created by open arms, open backs, slender spindles

A LIKING FOR TEXTURE

The single, most pronounced characteristic of our new taste is the emphasis on texture and textured effects—even in furniture

TEXTURE - by ILLUSION

Texture can be achieved by optical illusion. Smooth materials or slightly textured ones can be made to seem more textured than they really are by the use of several colors to produce the illusion of a third dimension, thus simulating the play of light and shadow

Examples of how texture can be achieved or heightened by color manipulation are: (1) Lees's carpet in brown and speckled cream; (2) Table top of handmade tiles by Elsa Hahn from Bertha Schaefer Galleries; (3) Vinyl floor tile, smooth to touch but textured to the eye, by Delaware Floor Products; (4) Cabin Crafts bedspread looking more textured than it really is, thanks to the contrast of its black and brown loops.

THE POWER OF FREE TASTE

See how, in one of the most important houses of 1952, a developed, freely-operating taste can bring serenity without dogma, unity without sterility, richness without vulgarity

From one end to the other, this house proves the organizing power of free taste. Never so free as to be sloppy, yet never so doctrinaire as to be dull, its architecture, decoration, and landscaping are woven into a tightly knit whole, so that it's hard to tell where one leaves off and another begins. By no means either a small or a cheap house, its spacious scale and luxurious details never seem in the least pretentious. The architectural forms are powerful without being oppressive; the materials familiar, yet used in fresh and winning ways. Its furnishings are old and new, native and foreign. Yet a free taste has welded it all into a most beguiling unity, as you'll see for yourself in the following pages.

Two traditional elements—stone chimney and lily pool—are here used in a novel way to separate living and dining areas. One leg of the chimney actually rests in the pool (sketch at right), which flows under the glass wall onto the terrace beyond. This handsome combination is, of course, suitable for warm climates only, since freezing would make it both impractical and unsightly. Note how sky-light cross-lights the stonework.

By James M. Fitch

In this story also, look for:

1. The dominance of the architecture over the furnishings.
2. The use of low-keyed, almost monochromatic color.
3. The "fading out" of the enclosing exterior wall.
4. The use of textures for richness.

Richness in texture contrasts

Textural contrasts in the dining room are very strong—from the rich graining of mountain rock, through the soft glow of pecky cypress and the liquid gleam of brass, to the polish of old, lovingly waxed woods. Color scheme, on the other hand, is all but monochromatic, ranging from honey-colored woods to sandy-beige of the tile to warm browns and reds of stone.

THE POWER OF FREE TASTE:

It can create new and unexpected richness

If you analyze the new house of the Welton Becketts closely, you'll find nothing especially new in the way of materials. Wood, stone, metal, tiles have all been around a long time. What, then, gives the house its air of freshness, of unhackneyed richness? Obviously, the way in which these materials have been handled. Here you can see an essentially modern design principle at work—an interest in texture for its own sake—regardless of historical or geographical associations. At the right, we've listed the major materials used in the interiors just to show their astonishing diversity. Yet, as assembled in the rooms they give no feeling of diverseness. On the contrary, the over-all effect is one of almost classic repose. Each was selected for its own inherent texture. Yet all have been used with such taste that they blend perfectly into the whole. THE POWER OF FREE TASTE: continued

It has liberated our planning

The Welton Beckets' taste, like that of all Americans, has been changing in recent years. How much it has changed, and in what direction, is apparent when you compare the house they built for themselves in 1938 (left, below) with their new house. The change is striking. They've learned to stand on their own feet, aesthetically.

In 1938, their taste was not yet free of the tyranny of precedent and tradition, which could force the inappropriate close-clipped eaves and pinched dormers of New England into the totally different climate of Southern California. In 1952, their new house still has wood walls, gabled roofs, wood shingles, stone chimney. Yet what a profound difference in over-all design. Now the eaves are wide and low. Whole walls of glass replace the small traditional windows. Ceilings are high, ventilation good, rooms are large and airy.

In 1938, traditional taste demanded a compact, two-story rectangle, ignoring any close relationship to the land or any difference in various exposures. In the new house the plan is open. All rooms have actual as well as visual contact with the grounds. Orientation is careful—most glass faces south or east, not a single window faces west, and all living areas face south and east.

1938: Tradition tyrannized their first house

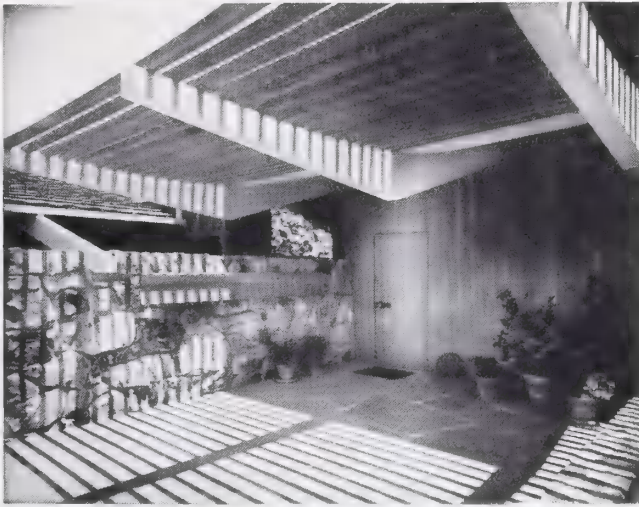

These two houses, built by the same family only 14 years apart, typify what has happened to American taste in that time. An aesthetic revolution has occurred. Standards of taste which imposed traditional forms on us, whether or not they were suitable to our climate or our actual living habits, have given way to new standards of taste. The result: handsomer, more relaxed, more comfortable houses.

Wall screens boys' wing from west

See how sensibly this plan is organized. Like the spokes of a wheel, four wings radiate from the big living-dining room at the center—master bedroom and study to west, boys to north, service to east, and party room to south. Glass areas are concentrated along south and east, overlooking living terraces. There is no glass toward west. Service yard and entrance court are carefully isolated.

It opens up the whole wide world of art

Art historians and anthropologists now agree that, from the earliest and most primitive times, all peoples have shown artistic ability, all have produced good art. You rob yourself of much pleasure if your tastes prevent your seeing this, if they confine your likes to only one school, one period or one country. And you will gain immensely when you discover the great common denominator which runs through all the art of all times and peoples.

This lesson the Beckets have learned well, as is obvious from their house. We've listed below some of their possessions, just to show how diverse the sources are. Yet, as you can see from the pictures, they all "go together." African masks. Navajo baskets. Chinese pewter. Early American brass pots and maple furniture—all of them combine effortlessly with modern architecture, furniture, fabrics.

The moral is clear: Only a taste that is developed and free can open up the whole world of art. Such a free taste gives you the power to recognize a (Continued on page 258)

What the American Tradition is not

What is the American Tradition in architecture? It is the modern tradition in architecture as it has been shaped by the conditions and needs and opportunities of life in the United States. Viewed broadly, it is part of a world-wide change that is reshaping man's environment and laying the foundations for a new civilization. What we in America have contributed to this tradition is important, not because our efforts were self-enclosed or self-sufficient, but because they brought together a larger number of forces and ideals, and in so doing made the modern movement more truly universal.

At the outset, I range the "American Tradition" with a world-wide movement toward shaping new architectural forms. When most people use this term, they conjure up precisely those elements that are not American. If they think of our earliest provincial architecture, they think of forms that were not yet definitely modified by New World needs or values, except perhaps in the farmhouses of seventeenth-century New England, where, by constant accretions and adaptations, an organic form began to take shape. So, too, people who mean by the "American Tradition" our Georgian buildings, betray by the very name the fact that they are referring to patterns and designs that were not in the least native. They forget that these same forms were typical of Colonial architecture from Samarkand to South Africa.

By Lewis Mumford

Even Greek Revival architecture in America, though it perhaps antedated similar work in Europe and had wider currency, derived, as the European examples did, from Stuart and Revett's Antiquities of Athens. If here this mode was seized upon passionately and gained wide ascendancy, that was mainly because the image of Greece, as the very pattern of democratic culture, was uppermost in the minds of the cultivated classes at a time when even ordinary schoolboys might read their Plutarch and recite their Demosthenes. Even a primitive kind of building, like the log cabin, was not as native as we once liked to think: Shurtleff has proved that the log cabin, a true native of the northern woodlands of Europe, was brought over by the Swedes to Delaware in the Eighteenth Century. Though later the log cabin proved highly useful on the frontier, before sawmills became common or trees scarce, it is hardly an American contribution; just the contrary, this "typically indigenous" form turns out, in fact, to be a universal one. (Editor's note: Examples of this misnamed "Traditional American" architecture are shown later in this article.)

The birth of a new world

The American Tradition is a mode of thinking and feeling, of planning and organizing and building, that Americans became conscious of only after they had established their political independence, had thrown off their colonial ways, and had begun to create a new mold for their life, in which past habits were modified by new processes, new activities, new purposes.

The first architectural writings on this tradition antedated any new building forms: The architects spelled the new ideas out in words long before they learned the art of translating them into sticks and stones and steel. The new possibilities that had first disclosed themselves in America were first plumbed by the writers of the Golden Day, by Emerson, Hawthorne, and Thoreau, by Whitman and Melville. When in the Eighties, in New England and the Middle West, this same spirit touched architecture, it is no accident that the (Continued on page 235)

3. Low-contrast color schemes.
4. Free taste.
5. Important use of texture in fabrics, rugs, and architecture.

Note that this 6-room house has 5 terraces

To supply eye-interest to the blank-wall rooms of traditional houses, pattern usually had to be added by way of the furnishings. But in our new houses the architecture itself supplies the pattern—with powerful eye-compelling compositions of frankly exposed structural members like beams, trusses, textured walls of wood, stone or brick, and transparent glass walls which draw outdoor vistas indoors. Additional pattern in furnishings would be overwhelming. That's why, as you see in the living room opposite, new furniture has subdued subtlety; fabric pattern is more textural than pictorial; colors are low-key, restful.

Please turn the page

Good contemporary architecture creates an effect of spaciousness, even where actual space is limited. Hence solid, eye-stopping partitions are few. This has created a brand-new furniture form—the free-standing room divider—designed to suggest a partition between areas of one room without completely stopping the eye. You can see through the 61"-high mindoro wood divider above. But it effectively screens dining from living area, provides storage with nine open shelves and two sliding-door cabinets. Center section opens as a desk. Right, in limited space against glass walls, dining tables must be light, unobtrusive, yet serve today's flexible eating habits. This drop-leaf can be extended from 27" to 67".

Large-scale architectural pattern makes us want less obvious pattern and color in the furnishings we see at close hand. So we tend to use the subtle patterns of textured fabrics, in soft nature colors. Light falling through this semi-sheer textured curtain-drapery, pleases but does not distract the eye. Two-tone cotton twist rug (incidentally, it camouflages footmarks) has quiet, low-contrast wood tones. For the trend in patterned fabrics, see pages 260-261.

Good modern architecture interrelates outdoors and indoors so naturally that there's scarcely a break between sheltered living and open-air living. You saw this first only in high-price, custom-built houses. But the concept has become so popular that now a house built to sell for $31,500, including landscaping and kitchen equipment, gives its six rooms five terraces—the living terrace and a secluded patio for each bedroom.

The architectural pattern of the roof design is so interesting and strong that any competition from the furnishings would confuse the eye. The roof trusses make a winglike pattern which penetrates through the glass walls and adds to the merging of indoors with outdoors. Note how interesting a structural necessity can be made to look!

Our furniture must now be designed with greater skill and imagination than ever, because so much is demanded of it. Chairs and sofas must be comfortable without being ponderous, so well proportioned that they look graceful seen from any angle in our open rooms, light enough to be easily moved from one area to another. Case pieces, like this buffet cabinet, must furnish prodigious storage space without looking bulky. Four drawers for table linen and silver, and a roomy cabinet for hollow ware, behind a tambour-pattern door, are gracefully set on raised legs, have a slender look.

Floor space is at a premium in most modern houses, so we cannot clutter our rooms with lots of small storage pieces. We must make the most of wall space wherever it exists, filling it with furniture that supplies storage yet looks as though it were architecturally built in. Opposite, three chests of drawers and a separate bookcase compose into a handsome wall-filling structure. Richly grained wood is mindoro, used in all the furniture in this house. Note the subtle contrast of color and graining against a semi-partition of mahogany.

Outside, the structure of the house declares itself as frankly as it does within. You can practically see the triangular skeleton that supports the peak roof, sloping off to the terrace side of the living room at right and to the sheltered entrance and carport at left. Note the glass insets at each side of chimney showing how the architects brought outside vistas inside wherever feasible to heighten the illusion of space. To see the effect of this new architecture on outdoor furniture, turn to page 311.

PHOTOGRAPH BY MAYNARD PARKER

Changes in garden design during the last two decades have been enormous. Unless you have had the opportunity to see the best new houses of recent years, you can hardly realize how completely and basically the garden has changed.

Even the term "garden" has changed its meaning. A garden used to have a horticultural meaning—a place where plants were grown to be displayed for mass effects, or to be examined individually. It was a place to walk through, to sit in briefly while you contemplated the wonders of nature before you returned to the civilized safety of the indoors. It was generally designed to provide a long vista from some dramatic spot within the house, such as the entry hall, the front steps, or a bay window. It was a place to be looked at, rather than a place to be lived in.

The new kind of garden is still supposed to be looked at. But that is no longer its only function. It is designed primarily for living, as an adjunct to the functions of the house. How well it provides for the many types of living that can be carried on outdoors is the new standard by which we now judge a garden.

This change in our ideas of what a garden is supposed to do for us was brought about by the force of several circumstances: the shrinking of the size of our houses due to high building costs, the disappearance of gardeners, the coming of power tools, and the increased use of glass. As the house grew smaller, many functions that used to go on inside the house were forced outside into less expensive space. Smaller rooms set up the need for bigger windows and whole walls of glass—to dissipate the feeling of cramped claustrophobia. So presently it became inevitable that the garden should attach itself to the house, not only in use, but structurally and visually. The garden had to go to work for us, solving our living problems while it also pleased our eyes and our emotional and psychological needs.

So a new style trend was born—out of human necessities. No arbitrary whims or designer's caprices created this new kind of garden. It evolved naturally and inevitably from people's requirements. And out of the solutions to these requirements has come a whole new visual aesthetics, contributed to by many landscape designers in many parts of the country. Though this new kind of garden design was born out of the problems of new houses, it has lately been applied to old houses. For it helps us get more usefulness from our property, and gives a new usefulness to old houses.

Peace and ease are the dominant characteristics of the new garden—peace and beauty for the eye and ease of maintenance for the owner. Fewer and (Continued on page 336)

The new architecture is at peace with nature and man

The design trend in houses is away from the narrow dogma of machine-form aesthetics and toward forms which are at home on the site, at ease with the landscape. They exist to serve the well-being of the owners

The dilemma of building a modern house throughout the last 20 years has been: how to humanize the basically cold forms of architecture. Some architects, to the detriment of their human clients, have built geometric houses that were publicized and promoted, in their words, as “machines for living.” Most people, however, refuse to become machines for their machines.

Elroy Webber has resolved the dilemma of cold form and human content in this house in Stamford, Connecticut, without destroying the beauty of his design. He used four basic principles, applicable to any architectural problem:

1. The house is “knitted” to the ground on which it stands and as a result produces a sense of security—whether you see it from the outside or whether you are contained by it. Because (Continued on page 218)

The casual patterns of a Connecticut forest flow right around, through, and over the man-made patterns of this house. The result is an easy merging of the house with its landscape.

To keep the house from seeming too obtrusive in its woodland setting and to further tie it into the ground, the exterior takes its color from soil and bark. White trim echoes white birches.

In this story also look for:

1. The exercise of free taste
2. A realistic attention to Climate Control
3. A strong indoor-outdoor relationship

Mr. Webber has so fitted the over-all form of the house to the character of the terrain that the design of the house does not seem arbitrary or overbearing. He has spread the lines of the house beyond its walls, allowing the trees and the rocks to come through the structure, gaining both horizontality and the visual effect of tying down the design.

2. The house has human scale—its dimensions do not dwarf the human figure. The machine forms of bad modern stress monumentality, and by their very size and coldness overpower and oppress the human being.

3. The house form departs completely from the cube: (a) by a double butterfly roof, (b) by varying ceiling heights, and (c) by a play of long horizontals stretching beyond the roof overhang and turning into posts.

4. The house uses materials, textures, and colors of its landscape—brown wood, native stone and flagstone, white trim echoing the white birches. Yet it does not imitate the outdoors. Nor does it require rustic furniture or bark-covered wood. Result: The house is at peace with both nature and man.

Along the east wall, existing trees are carefully preserved and local plant material added to give the house the appearance of having always been there. The total effect is a relaxed but tidy rusticity.

The generous scale and simple detailing of the overhang give the south front of the house a handsome, weather-wise porch. Central glass panel in living room slides to one side for warm-weather ventilation.

Nowhere is the architect's successful merging of indoor and outdoor forms more striking than here in the entry where lichen-covered stone is juxtaposed with white plaster, polished wood, and antique sculpture.

Architect

The semi-circular breakfast nook takes its form from its hemispherical plastic skylight. To control excess light and heat—bane of all skylights—architect Webber has worked out a wood slat shade that works like a lady's fan. Slat, carried by a black iron frame hung from ceiling, fold up when sun is wanted. Opened, they cut off direct light, amid reflected light.

Living-dining area (below) has a glass wall to south which opens up room, visually and actually, to main terrace. For summertime ventilation, central glass panel slides to one side. For foot traffic and cold-weather ventilation there are two standard hinged doors—one against kitchen wall, one in southeast corner. Concrete slab floors are heated for winter comfort.

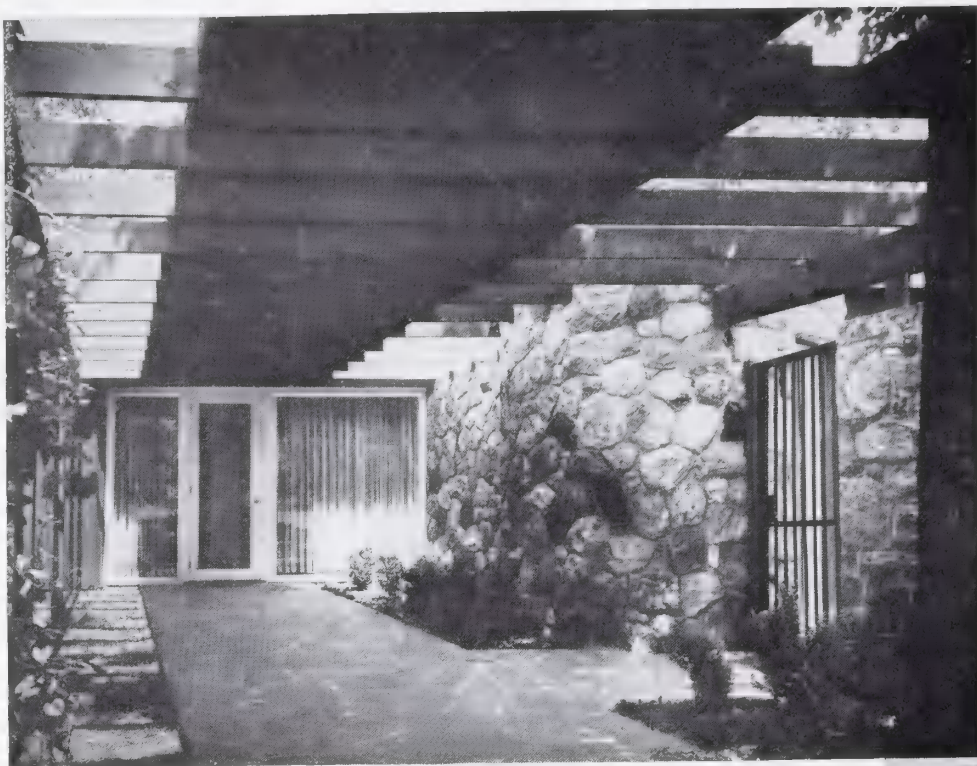

For all its apparently casual situation amid the trees, this house is carefully designed for climate control. All principal rooms face east or south (most desirable exposures in this region). All south glass has deep overhangs. North and west walls are mainly closed. Trees have been preserved to give complete canopy of summer shade, cut out sky glare and low afternoon sun. Since the trees are deciduous, the house gets full winter sun. Note how arrangement of service yard, carport, and turn-around keeps all traffic and service completely separated and away from the living areas.

The approach to the front door forms a skillful transition zone between the woodland landscape and the interiors. Fieldstone walls of service yard and kitchen wing, flagstone paving and rough-sawn wood arbor, all create a disarming air of rusticity. And though this whole area is quite geometric in design, it is mellowed by the way in which existing trees and boulders are allowed to interrupt it. All in all, its impression of wide, hospitable shelter prepares you for the entrance hall shown at left, below.

Flagstone paving and fieldstone walls carry right through the glass wall into the entrance hall (left). But now the stones are waxed, the ceiling is smooth white plaster, and polychrome wooden sculpture is mounted on the rough stone. Actually, this is the back of the central chimney, so that the stone carries around into living room (facing page). Here the transition is complete. For now the stone is subordinated to the crisp lines and geometric forms of fireplace hood and furniture, to the bland textures of white plaster and glowing upholstery fabrics. Yet see how low-keyed colors of natural materials are retained, while their textures are replaced by smooth, polished, obviously man-made ones in the room's chief furnishings.

FREE TASTE on your

dining table

Everywhere the trend in table settings is toward the free use of anything that is beautiful if it fills your serving needs. Others are making table arrangement a creative, three-a-day exercise in originality. So why shouldn't you?

By Sara Little

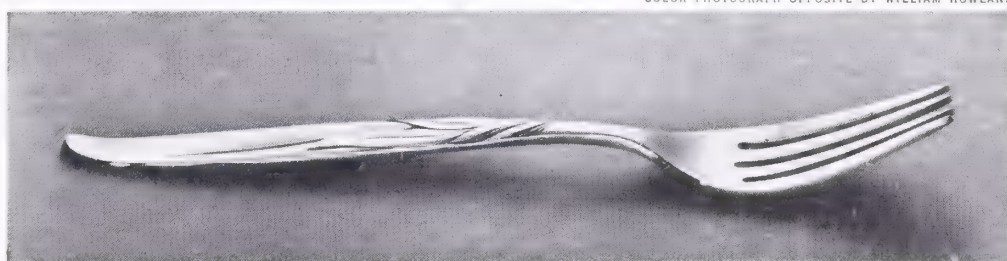

We quote, at random, from the little black notebooks our editors carry on their frequent trips about the country:

"In Vermont, Mrs. H. makes a permanent centerpiece of a lazy Susan loaded with milk glass cruets, uses free-form white china on burlap mats, serves salads in plastic bowls that look like wicker" . . . "Dinner table at Mrs. F's, Colorado—red linen damask cloth (she dyed it), emerald green china, old Bohemian wine glasses in assorted colors" . . . "Mrs. B., New York—living room full of fine ceramics; sometimes puts gray, granite-textured stoneware on table (uses flat dishes for butter plates, short vases for coffee mugs) with stainless steel plates on circles of brown terry cloth" . . . "Mrs. de L., New Orleans, sets heirloom sterling dinner plates on long runner of matchstick bamboo" . . . "Miss W., Chicago—travels a lot, collects table-setting ideas. Favorite luncheon setting: flat brass trays as mats, soup in red Japanese lacquer bowls on black plastic plates."

Do you see what all this means? From east to west, from damask to burlap, these unlike tables, set by unlike women, share in common a fresh and precious non-conformity. They indicate that women everywhere are discarding the old, style-cramping traditions of "correctness." Instead, they are setting their tables by the new standards of "Is it beautiful?" or "Is it original and appropriate to the occasion?" That is, they are practicing free taste.

How to develop discrimination

and springboard to free taste*

By Joseph Wood Krutch

There are books on How to Do almost everything. On how to fly a plane or build a chimney; how to write a poem or even, if you should be so inclined, how to eat fire or swallow a sword.

But there are surprisingly few on how to enjoy what you do do, or even how to know what you are doing. Every year scores of articles tell us the way to plan a house or cook a meal. But rarely are we told how to live in the house we have planned, or how to enjoy the food we have cooked.

Yet these are arts much less seldom practiced than building or cooking. In fact, though the ill-fed and ill-housed are no doubt numerous, one sometimes wonders if they are not less so than those who might almost as well be ill-fed and ill-housed because they have no art of living in the houses they own or of eating the food placed before them.

Perhaps the books not written would be harder to write than those which have been. A science or a technique is much easier to communicate than an art. But that is no reason for not trying when the need is so obvious.

Why should not those who find the experience of living delightful try to tell those who are insensitive and bored how they practice their art?

We know without being told that awareness is the key to it all; that one cannot enjoy what one does not notice. "Only that day dawns to which I am awake." So said Thoreau.

But how does one cultivate awareness? How do we make sure that we are awake? If our (Continued on page 262)

To those stifled by the rules, plate glass is for windows, a weather-gnarled tree trunk is just dead wood. But if those whose taste is free see new use for glass and beauty in dead wood, they simply act upon their own judgment. Such thinking created this table.

on their imagination. In most, it is simply an escape from daily regimentation. In a few cases, there is a personal creativity that must be satisfied, so they make their own rugs and curtains and occasionally design their own furniture and build their own houses.

Free taste may be exercised by anyone—certainly anyone with an average income. Many are proving to their own amazement that they have a capacity for creativity they never suspected. Others are demonstrating that free taste is also creative purchasing: They are encouraging creativity in local craftsmen and, at the same time, bringing creativity into their homes. The Becket house with examples of free taste, shown on pages 192-199, is one fine sample.

Everywhere, it seems, people are discovering they have taste if they have confidence. Once they have freed their vision from prejudice and convention, they have felt their awareness grow. Once they have freed their taste from the current clichés, their personality begins to grow and all life takes on color and adventure. Trusting themselves, they have begun to know themselves. They no longer fret to ing themselves to the attitudes of their group. They try copying other people's homes. They apply an arrangement that may be successful under one set of conditions but which is entirely different from their own. They don't understand their failure, because they don't understand the nature of a successful home.

The truly successful home, like the truly successful house, is the creative—and practical—resolution of a particular problem.

Reflect a moment on the few really distinctive homes you know. They have a character that is all their own—the character of their owners. The possessions you admire are the personal expression of the people themselves. Their furniture may vary from Chippendale to modern Finnish, yet the pieces go together, because they were brought together by the same free taste. What people of confidence choose will always show the unity of their integrity. They need never worry about rules. They make their own.

Oddly, it is the American who has achieved success in business by the daring unconventionality of his ideas who is often most conventional, over-conforming, and unsuccessful in his own home. He builds railroads and bridges despite

STROMBERG-CARLSON
"Custom Four Hundred"
HIGH-FIDELITY EQUIPMENT
"gives full musical satisfaction"

Prior to the introduction of Stromberg-Carlson's new high-fidelity equipment, one of the world's greatest conductors, Leopold Stokowski, was asked to evaluate it. Alone in his own studio, with his library of recordings and his matchless knowledge of music, he tested the equipment.

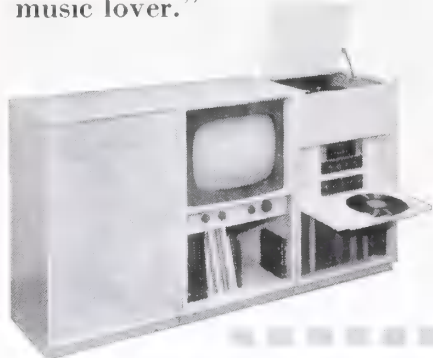

These are his conclusions:

STOKOWSKI STATES:

"For discriminating music lovers who wish to hear great music in its full beauty, I can recommend with confidence the Stromberg-Carlson reproducer, which I have thoroughly tested.

"It has a single stylus with diamond pick-up and long, light tone arm which reduces distortion to a minimum—a 25-watt amplifier and pre-amplifier which incorporates the latest technical knowledge—and a 15" speaker with large enclosure.

"All these features create a reproducer of high quality that will give full musical satisfaction to the discerning music lover."

"Custom Four Hundred" FM-AM tuner, amplifier, record changer, speaker and a choice of cabinets are available as components for those high-fidelity fans who wish to assemble their own installation. Fine cabinets are available for those who prefer the complete units already assembled.

obstacles: he practices a rugged individualism outside his home and a passive conformity inside it. This may be one reason for the discontent many businessmen feel when they return from the stimulation of their work to the deadness of their home. They know that if, by error, they were to enter the house down the way, they might find exactly the same things, arranged exactly the same way, as in their own.

If, on the other hand, they are men who exercise little individuality in the office, because they are employees, how tiring to find the same impersonal atmosphere at home that they have just left at the office.

Since the first World War, at least, men have been warning Americans never to lose their essential qualities: individuality and freedom. Here are two of the most recent warnings:

"The idea that men are created free and equal is both true and misleading: men are created different; they lose their social freedom and their individual autonomy in seeking to become like each other." So concludes David Riesman in his scholarly work, The Lonely Crowd, a Study of the Changing American Character.

In the Spirit of Liberty, Judge Learned Hand probes the same problem. "Our dangers," he says in a chapter significantly titled "The Preservation of Personality," "as it seems to me, are not from the outrageous but from the conforming; not from those who rarely and under the lurid glare of obloquy upset our moral complaisance, or shock us with unaccustomed conduct, but from those, the mass of us, who take their virtues and their tastes, like their shirts and their furniture, from the limited patterns which the market offers."

Up and down the land, people are living their answer to Mr. Riesman and Judge Hand. They are reclaiming their manhood from the conspiracy of society. They still think they are in a minority, because they themselves feel no longer part of the majority. But their shift—and here is the revolution that is occurring, unknown to themselves—is taking place generally. More people are involved than they know, although practically everyone they talk to feels the way they do. They mistakenly believe their attitude belongs only to their own small circle of friends. They should take courage. It is wide-spread and spreading wider.

Everyone, everywhere, is recoiling from the impact of infantile TV programs, the violence of comic books and crime stories, the influence of cheap and bad design. But people are finding the way out.

As formerly, pioneers left crowded communities to forage on their own; so today, Americans are beginning to abandon group thinking and are pioneering their own lives. They are slowly reaching maturity—and their salvation—by working out their own culture.

If this maturity often comes late in life, it is because here in America one travels alone the road to personal culture. It takes time and courage, but it results in a finer and finer understanding of oneself and the truth of beauty. In Europe the patterns of culture are already formed and children are accustomed to them early. They may vary them somewhat later, but the form is set. They fit in or they move out, they can, to the colonies.

WE COME from such a variety of races, classes, conditions, even climates, that we cannot have a single culture, as we cannot have a single style. "Our idea is democracy," as Louis Sullivan expressed it. We are most American when we develop individually and differently. If we are true to ourselves, we arrive at ourselves. When we do we have something no one else in the world has. Our lives, our values are personal. We should start earlier, arrive sooner, and so enjoy ourselves longer.

The road to personal culture is peopled by those in pursuit of quality rather than names. At the end of the road, they find that quality they have been searching in themselves. They are leaders of the new revolt by their behavior. They stand like rocks of integrity wherever men gather. Their homes refresh the human spirit.

They have found that quality whether in friends or things, perceived immediately, because there is no mediate, not postponed, value. They have developed a sense of adventure, because they roam the world and taste it freely. They are participating in the history of civilization because they are civilizing themselves, because they are

ing works of art, not reproductions of famous-name artists. They are the new aristocrats, because they are the patrons of local craftsmen. They encourage greatness by showing a real appreciation for it, wherever they find it, among the beginners and the unknowns.

Americans of free taste are living full lives, because they have full confidence in themselves. They get it, whether primitive Haitian paintings or sophisticated Chinese porcelain. By bland possession, the English made all things they found in their travels and conquests their own. They took Oriental furniture and made Chippendale from it. Similarly, the French took the Italian Renaissance and made it French in France.

AMERICANS today can cream the whole world. We have the wealth and opportunity. We can travel and scour the world more easily than the English in the last century. All things may become our own. We may possess anything we buy, if we understand it and ourselves. It will never be ours if it reflects other people's choices or even other people's understanding. Until one arrives at understanding—the road can only be free taste—one can never feel happy with a possession. And unhappy possessions mean an unhappy home.

The truly free man cannot be beaten. That is why the second American Revolution must win. The man of free taste does not pretend to know or like what he doesn't know or like. When he does, he is unassailable. The truly independent, the really autonomous man can comb the world freely. Nothing human, no stick of furniture or idea, is alien to him. The whole range of human experience is his to choose from and is his when he chooses. He—no you, you have a world to discover and possess, especially yourself.

We can well be proud of an old building like Independence Hall. But the very fact we call it "Georgian" shows that it belongs to a school of design that was not in the least native. Such provincial capitals as this were typical of eighteenth-century Colonial architecture, says Mr. Mumford, and were built from South Africa to Samarkand.

architects who led this movement, Louis Sullivan and Frank Lloyd Wright, had in their youth turned spiritual sustenance to Emerson and Whitman.

The great American writers of the Golden Day were touched by new experiences: the struggle with the wilderness, the adventurous efforts of the pioneer to break fresh earth and stake out new spiritual aims, the exploration of remote lands by clipper ships and whalers, and the multiplying contacts that were taking place with non-western cultures in Africa, Asia, and the South Seas. The disaffection from Europe which characterized the patriotic American of this period varied of a doomed feudalism, and properly frightened by the burgeoning new industrialism of Manchester and Birmingham, this disaffection opened the American mind to other cultures than the European. For Emerson, the Persian classics were as close as the Greek and Roman myths, just as for Frank Lloyd Wright, fifty years later, the clean exquisite lines of Japanese print were even closer to the traditional image and line of the Renaissance.

With the same openness and boldness of mind, the best minds of the Golden Day accepted the triumphs of science and the machine: Emerson was more relative to the doctrine of evolution than his Swiss-born contemporary,

Agassiz, and even Thoreau, that dedicated lover of the primitive, found the music of the new telegraph wires in the mind as quickening as the more traditional Aeolian harp. In his search for cultural elements that were missing in the new world, the pious American might trudge over Europe, ransacking its castles and palaces and art galleries and museums; but the writer of Self-Reliance, in a sturdier spirit, would sing: "Give to pots and trays and pans, grace and glimmer of romance."

If the revolt came earlier in literature than in architecture, that is only because architecture deals with more refractory materials. The writer can afford to wait for his audience; but the architect must remain impotent until his client has caught up with him. If the architect is too far in advance of his times to have the opportunity to build, he will be an architect in name only. This essential relation of agreement and co-operation between architect and client has, however, another side to it that is too frequently overlooked: namely, that the great periods of architecture are those in which the client has, by his sympathy and understanding, brought forth the architect's utmost powers, as the clients of Richardson, Sullivan, Root, Jenney, and Wright brought forth theirs. That is why architecture is a better indication of the general vitality of a society than any other art.

In general, the courage to break loose from the stereotypes of the past did not come until after the Civil War. When it came, it was associated with the rise of mechanical industry, and its first outcome was disorder, confusion, vulgarity, and downright barbarism. Yet, industrialism, however vile at first appearance, was a formative element in the new culture that was coming forth; and the best buildings of the period were the industrial primitives—the cotton factories, the iron and glass market halls, the hothouses—whose forthright pragmatism was itself a symbol of the growing dominance of the machine, not merely in industry itself, but in the ordering of men's minds.

By the middle of the Nineteenth Century the studied resurrection of the dead had turned every big city into a cemetery of eclecticism: Even Egyptian tombs, as in the famous prison in New York, or in many fraternity houses in college towns, would be added to Chinese pagodas and Roman temples. But long before the Eighties, a new approach to both architecture and life began to take form in the American mind. It is important to grasp this sequence; for a fear of ideas is one of the marks of our present cultural self-stultification; and nothing could be more misleading than a history of American architecture concerned solely with technical processes and building forms, without any reference to the ideal framework in which all the changes took place. Even the belief in the machine, the desire to use the new processes and express them in building, is itself a formative idea.

The great precursor of modern form, or at least the great philosopher, was Horatio Greenough. In his actual works of art he was so like Downing, tied to the past, though he had courage enough to break with contemporary prudishness in modeling the statue of a native George Washington in the fashion of the Roman emperors. But, in search for new principles of form fitted to the modern age, this original mind laid the groundwork for a new aesthetic doctrine, a doctrine capable of dealing with the forces and values that science and mechanization were producing. Technical audacity and scientific originality provided at least a partial framework for a new school of life; Greenough had the insight to see that this must likewise apply to our aesthetics. Emerson had once recognized the force and potential of Greenough's clean, unadorned evaluation of the new architecture, but the essays in which this Yale Stone Cutter set forth his philosophy, though re-published in Memoir in the 1870's, never had the wide, popular success, comparable to that which greeted Le Corbusier some two generations later, when he put forth ideas of the same order in Vers une Architecture. WHERE DID THE CONTEMPORARY AMERICAN HOUSE COME FROM?

The Georgian style furnished many a handsome façade to the pre-Revolutionary colonies as in this one at Mt. Aing in Virginia. But according to Mr. Mumford, such houses, however pleasant to look at, in effect denied that history moves, that new times demand new forms.

less, it is possible that Greenough's ideas continued to work under the surface: and this may even help to explain the fact that their next expositor was another young New Englander, Louis Sullivan.

Actually, the architectural demonstration of Greenough's ideas about function and form did not achieve anything like Greenough's clarity until John and Washington Roebling designed the Brooklyn Bridge. Even then, the architects were slow to follow this lead or, even when they followed it, to recognize what they were doing for what it actually was. Indeed, Le Baron Jenney, one of the major technical innovators, seems to have gone about his work like a sleep-walker, often instinctively doing the right thing but never conscious enough of it to give a rational account of his purpose. From the 1840's to the 1880's, the new practices that were to invigorate American architecture were confined mainly to the shipyards and the factory. James Jackson Jarves turned to the Yankee Clipper to exemplify the new form, indeed the new method of thought, that would presently affect architecture. Yes, the clipper ship, or even the new Yankee clocks, the American ax, most shapely and delicately poised of the new forms, made the sensitive see that the new was not necessarily the ugly, or that the products of the machine were not, in their own fashion, less beautiful than the more intricate forms of handicraft. Here the new style, shapely, naked, clean, was actually in process of formation.

Domestic forms and regional adaptations

Though the United States was a focal point for the invention of modern forms and for the new tradition, I must emphasize that it was part of a larger movement and that a similar tale could be told, with appropriate modifications, for other countries within the same orbit of civilization.

The new tradition rested on a fivefold foundation: The domestic, the regional, the mechanical, the social, the universal all entered into it. The decisive point of departure was a break with the conception of an architectural absolute, an archetypal perfection established for all time by the Greeks and Romans—that brittle error of the Renaissance. This error had been taken over even by the opponents of the Renaissance model like Pugin and Ruskin: for these men sought to give to some moment in the development of Gothic architecture, such as the style of thirteenth-century Lombardy, which Ruskin favored, the same stereotyped authority that Palladianism

Our ancestors often knew more about orientation than we do: Early Dutch houses always faced south, the porch roof shading the glass in summer while admitting low winter sun. Blank walls to west kept out hot, summer afternoon sun; central hall gave summer ventilation had claimed for the classic. Behind this conception, supposedly based on history, was actually the conviction that history does not count; that time does not make a difference; that it is possible, by some formula of proportions, some fixation on elementary forms, to possess an eternal quality in art without doing justice to the time-bound, the local, the living and the subjective, and, therefore, the unique and finally incalculable.

But when architecture is so considered, it loses the qualities of a living art; it is at best a mask or a form of scenic decoration; sometimes a comely mask, but nevertheless a mask. The renunciation of this false historicism brought about a return to real history, and restored continuity with a living tradition. One of the first steps in innovation, both in England and in America, was to return to the simple elemental forms of the seventeenth-century farmhouse, to a vernacular that was continuous with the whole tradition of building in the ages before it, and had reached a fresh level of fitness and comely form, derived from the new taste for privacy and for a sense of family life. (See page 242.)

Here was a true picking up of the thread of historic continuity, in a type of building, the dwelling house, whose form was still to be affected, in any large degree, by mechanical inventions. The soul for this new architecture many, and one of them, surely, a growing sense of the quality of the natural landscape, interpreted by Andrew Jackson Downing, carried even further by one of the greatest artists and citizens America has yet produced, Frederick Law Olmsted. One of the leading principles of this new naturalism in architecture and landscape design was that the building and landscape should form a harmonious whole. Sometimes this was true in a too primly lighted manner, but it meant that, say, pointed gables and fir trees should go together, as the curious will find if they examine Bruce Price's essay in Houses in City and Country, edited by John Sell Sturgis, it involved much more than this: The proper placing of the building to command a view, to court summer breezes, to get the maximum amount of winter light. (See picture above.) Domestic architects of the 1880's were conscious of "orientation" and the boldest experimenters today; realizing that Mr. Richard Neutra's written about "the mysterious realities of the site" would seem in the least strange to

In this very matter of orientation indeed, one discovers what a long hiatus has occurred, particularly in America, through the lack of (Continued on page 242)

WHERE DID THE CONTEMPORARY AMERICAN HOUSE COME FROM?

The seventeenth-century New England farm house, though naturally based on the tradition English settlers brought with them, nevertheless reached fresh levels of fitness and comely form. This is the ancestor of our modern house.

a conscious tradition, critically re-examined and passed on from generation to generation. The correct principles of orientation were long ago demonstrated by Vitruvius in his famous treatise; though that seems to have been the last lesson the pious followers of Vitruvius in the Renaissance were ready to learn, unless Professor Anthony Garvan is right in thinking it dictated the plan of New Haven, Connecticut. So, too, the interest in Chinese art and thought in the Eighteenth Century did not apparently bring about any insight into the similar Chinese principles of orientation. In Brackenbridge's Modern Chivalry, at the beginning of the Nineteenth Century, he observed of the houses in a back country settlement: "There was still a defect of judgment in the construction of their houses, for the summer as well as the winter seasons. They were placed, in most cases, as they ought to be, fronting the south, but without perforations or passages for the air by means of windows from the west to the east." That insight became universal. While the architects of the Eighties arrived by themselves at the correct principle, of making the main rooms of the house face the south or southeast, that principle was presently lost once more, so that when it was first recovered by town planners, a generation later, they at first took for granted that an east-west exposure was the best one. Like every other choice made by the architect, orientation for sunlight is only one of the factors that must be taken into account, but the principle that utility rooms and rooms for nocturnal use should be on the north side, and living rooms, children's rooms, and the kitchen should be on the south side should remain a paramount factor in design.

The principles of solar orientation were re-established on a scientific basis by a Boston architect William Atkinson, who in turn drew upon various contemporary experiments. By building sunboxes with a glass front open to the south solar experimenters discovered that a temperature of 100° Fahrenheit could be obtained indoors when the outside temperature was zero or lower; and, even more important, Atkinson demonstrated that a southern exposure in a temperate latitude is the most favorable one since it gives a minimum amount of sunlight in summer and a maximum amount in winter. The first edition of Atkinson's book consisted of a thousand copies; and, to judge by the effect it had on American architecture, very few of that thousand were sold, or at least read to any purpose. When Henry Wright, Sr. and George Keck in the 1930's once more sought independently to establish the correct with a "MODERNFOLD" DOOR!

How about your home? Do you have a corner that could be useful and attractive—if you didn't have to allow for a swinging door? If so, why not put in a "Modernfold" door . . . and put a chair, desk or table in the space that a swinging door wastes.

Need an extra room? . . . another bedroom . . . a study . . . a TV room? You can use "Modernfold" doors here, too—as movable walls to make two rooms out of one, or as folding partitions between your present rooms.

Can I afford them? You be the judge. Large "Modernfold" doors often cost less than permanent partitions. And small "Modernfold" doors—because they're simple to install, require virtually no upkeep—cost no more than space-wasting swinging doors.

WHERE DID THE CONTEMPORARY AMERICAN HOUSE COME FROM?

The most vigorous American tradition flowered again in the early 1900's, in such houses as this by the Brothers Greene. Here you can see the progenitor of the shingled "bungalow" of 1910-15, as well as the ancestor of much of the best of today's contemporary architecture.

It festered itself in a peculiarly American type of open plan for the common living quarters. John Wellborn Root, writing on the domestic dwellings of the Middle East, observed: "One feature in the plans of western city dwellings must be very clearly defined. This is their openness. Not only are windows upon the average larger than in the East, but they are more frequent, as are also bay-windows, oriels, etc., while in the general plan, rooms are more closely related, openings between rooms wider, and single swinging-doors less frequent. Several dwellings in Chicago—and there are many in other western cities—have no doors whatever in the first story, except those at the entrance between the dining room and the butler's pantry, curtains being exclusively used." Root was in error only in thinking that this was a contrast between the West and the East. It was mainly a contrast between the old and the new, for many eastern plans show the same kind of openness: in both cases, well before Frank Lloyd Wright had pushed the open plan to its logical conclusion by a thorough reorganization of space, rather than merely leaving a wall open on an otherwise conventional layout of rooms.

One thing is plain: The movement toward utilizing the indigenous, the natural, the regional in the dwelling house resulted in the first buildings in the United States that could properly be called original or truly contemporary or consciously wedded to their soil.

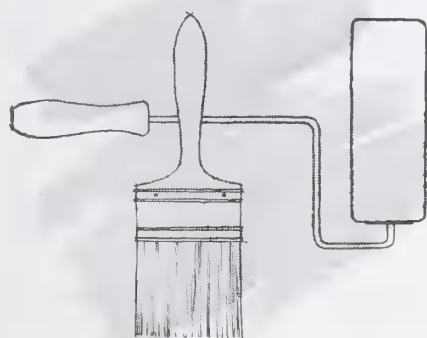

The architecture of the Interregnum

From 1895 to 1915, American architecture still had many vigorous moments. This was the period of Sullivan's own most original buildings, including the Schlesinger and Mayer department store (C. S. Pirie, Scott & Co.), of Wright's bold and characteristic development of his Prairie Houses, to nothing of his Larkin Building at Midway Gardens; it was the period that, on the Pacific Coast, gave Bernard Maybeck, to Irving Gill to the Brothers Greene, the opportunity for many happy experiments with indigenous forms. Even in less pretentious buildings of this time, the influence of the arts and crafts movement in purifying and simplifying public taste was healthy one and it had widespread effects. The Mission furniture of this period, sound, if ponderous, often survived to generations, its misuse in college dormitories and fraternity houses; while the bungalows popularized by Craftsman magazine, if often crude in design, introduced many substantial innovations in housekeeping—not only rationalized kitchen but the very idea of giving a home the convenience of an apartment by confining it to one floor. Too, too, was the period of regional differentiation—a movement that only now beginning to be carried far enough to introduce those subtle differentiations in adaptation to setting or to climate, that

COMING IN: GRACEFUL SCULPTURED FURNITURE

PHOTOGRAPH BY DALE ROOKS

Formal, static arrangements of furniture are being replaced by casual groupings of pieces with sculptured lines that look well from all angles. The upholstered sections as well as the walnut frame of this armchair designed by Finn Juhl have been shaped into soft contours. Imported from Denmark by Georg Jensen.

PHOTOGRAPH BY MAYNARD PARKER

Chairs that float from one spot to another in open space must not seem to block the vision. See how the open arms, open back, and open cane seat of this one make it almost wholly transparent. The sculptured frame is teak; its back cane-wrapped. Hans Wegner design, imported from Denmark by Georg Jensen.

Delicate carving, abandoned during the swing to stripped-down forms, is back again. But it is used for softness and subtle detail rather than applied ornament. How beautifully the under-arm of this chair is molded where it joins the back post and again just behind the front post! Finn Juhl design for Baker.

Sculptured lines delight our eyes as well as our fingers because they seem to be ever-changing. Each time you change your angle of vision you discover an entirely new silhouette. Compare these two views of a new Finn Juhl design for Baker Furniture, Inc. See how transparent it looks from both angles.

Even the type of chair we loosely classify as "straight-backed" has been given graceful flowing lines. The open back of this dining chair makes it look much lighter than it would if it had a rigid vertical back support. Wood appears to be supple. It was designed by Bertha Schaefer for M. Singer & Sons.

give further grace and variety to our standardized procedures.

Nor was the influence of the current magazines, whether architectural or popular, wholly on the side of the Genteel Reaction. Far from it. The pages of the Architectural Record, the Western Architect, and, not least, Gustav Stickley's handsomely designed magazine, The Craftsman, gave modern architecture an impetus, by publicizing its good buildings and subjecting them to critical appreciation. All this should not be underrated. The innovators of this period were not, in fact, ostracized, nor still less deprived of the opportunity to work. Even the women's magazines, which came to exert such a retarding influence in abetting the reaction that took place after 1915, were on the side of the innovators. Did not the Ladies' Home Journal early in the century sponsor two of Frank Lloyd Wright's houses?

Actually, a sturdy sense of self-confidence was widespread during this period. Perhaps here is the place to quote Montgomery Schuyler on the works of Sullivan and Wright. "It is hard to see," he said, "how an unprejudiced inquirer can deny that such designers as Mr. Sullivan or Mr. Wright have the root of the matter, and that their works are of good hope, in contrast with the rehandling and rehashing, of admired historical forms, in which there is no future nor any possibility of progress."

This is not to discount the forces of reaction. The blight of the Chicago World's Fair did, in fact, fall heavily upon the big cities, as the old-fashioned enterprises of the Eighties, brusque, exuberant, and vulgar, the men who built the steel-works and sank the oil wells and girdled the continent with railroads, gave way to a less attractive type, the slick financiers and manipulators, whose methods were

ALL PRINTS AND PHOTOGRAPHS COURTESY THE BETTMANN ARCHIVE

The houses of Frank Lloyd Wright reflected international artistic currents—L'Art Nouveau, Cubism, Japanese print-making—without for a moment losing aesthetic contact with the place, the climate, the people for whom the house was immediately created.

more devious and whose vulgarity, though just as conspicuous, sought to mask itself in the hand-me-downs of culture, refurbished and framed, at fabulous prices, by equally adroit financial manipulators, like Joseph Duveen. These men were no longer creators, but taping and goggle-eyed connoisseurs; no longer builders, but buyers; and their values, being based on the counters of finance, were as derivative as they were abstract. They pictured themselves as the Caesars and the Borgias and Napoleons of their era; and, instead of taking chances in buying works of art or financing buildings, they wanted only gilt-edged securities, whose value was already well established on the market place.

The contribution of the machine

If it was out of a fresh sense of the soil and the landscape and the region that one part of the living American Tradition has come—and must still come—it is through the challenge of the machine that another part has manifested itself. Here, the American had a special advantage over the European. Raw materials existed here in abundance, but labor, except in the days of the most copious immigrations, was relatively scarce. This situation put a premium on American ingenuity, not in the least limited to the Yankee, for inventing labor-saving devices; it kept him from wasting precious time on embellishing, with irrelevant images, utilitarian objects otherwise complete without such ornamentation.

Now clean mechanical forms, well adapted to the function they served, did not, of course, originate with the power loom or the steam engine; indeed the steam engine, for a long time, was a far from clean form. Even simple handicraft ages enjoyed such organic forms, in barns and haystacks, in walls and fortifications and warehouses. The mission of the machine was to universalize that simplicity and cleanliness in the interest of efficiency or labor saving.

The social conception of architecture

The architect has a social responsibility and the individual building must be related to its site, to its landscape, to the neighborhood and city of which it is a part. The last stage in design is the expression of this relationship. Under this new conception, the community as a whole, not the individual building, becomes the center of our concern. The architect must visualize wholes and design wholes for a simple reason: We live in wholes, not as individual atoms moving at random, but as purposive beings, creating orderly patterns of related activities, made coherent by an orderly environment.

Viewed in this fashion, the beauty of the individual building cannot be self-contained. The handsomest building may be defaced by its surroundings, while the simplest of vernacular structures, if properly grouped and gardenized, may have a charm out of all proportion to the quality of the individual units. So it follows that streets, courts, gardens, arcades of trees, parks, parkways, must be treated as an integral part of the building, not introduced as a belated afterthought, to be fitted into an irrelevant plan.

The impact of the universal

One would not do justice to the American Tradition in architecture if one neglected the part played in our own development by forces originating outside our country. Universal elements, besides the machine, have had an influence on the American Tradition. One important influence was that of tropical architecture. Robert Louis Stevenson's house in Samoa was widely reproduced in photographs in the heyday of his popularity—a house with wide window spaces and porches, adapted to the climate; and from India, about the same time, came the similar concept of the bungalow, that swept the United States in the first decade of this century with all the rooms on one floor. The Japanese house was, likewise, in its elements, a tropical form, and superficially it had an effect on California architects like the Brothers Greene, though the Japanese flexibility of inner space was an innovation they were slow to carry further.

Both Japanese painting and western photography probably had a hand in a new selectivity. But there was also a moral influence at work, that of Morris and Tolstoy, with their doctrine of returning to the elements: "Possess nothing that you do not know to be useful or believe to be beautiful." That dictum of Morris's resulted in the general cleaning of form that characterized this period, and was promoted by the more advanced architects of the time.

The American architect who went farthest in this simplification was, perhaps, Irving Gill, a bold pioneer on the West Coast—well in advance of the purism of Le Corbusier and Ozenfant—whose work still awaits a proper monograph. One further universal element, topping all these, though perhaps ultimately drawing nourishment from the same roots, was Cubism. Cubism had, in fact, nothing to teach Frank Lloyd Wright: but the pleasure of translating organic forms into crystalline, geometric ones, of renouncing the wavy line of L'Art Nouveau in favor of the right angle and the cube disclosed certain new aspects of the environment to which traditional art had been indifferent. One may say that Cubism released the architectural mind so that it felt free to deal with the machine and its products as aesthetic forms in their own right. This was precisely how Root, Penney, and Sullivan, in their best moment, had acted, almost instinctively, and as Frank Lloyd Wright had done consciously.

That a real break in the American Tradition had taken place between 1910 and 1925, aggravated by the First World War, with its slowing down of contacts by travel and commercial interchange, is proved by the fact that the new doctrines of architecture, derived from the machine and from Cubism, came back to America in the mid-Twenties without anyone here noting that they were only coming back to the country of their origin.

From the perspective of a whole generation one can now see that Le Corbusier, in his historical innocence, sought to substitute a mannerism for the genuine organic style, visible in our grain elevators and our factories, that was, in fact, still in existence in America, though temporarily under eclipse in dwelling houses, public buildings, and skyscrapers.

In no matter what medium the artist works, it is important that he should use those forms and develop those processes which will, in fact, create unity among men. Hence, a certain taming down of idiom and idiosyncrasy is called for, in order to make the physical background more intelligible and usable by other men. The underlying unity of design would become dreary and repressive if it imposed any rigorous uniformity of pattern. Hence, the significance of Frank Lloyd Wright's work, as interpreted by Behrendt; for Wright's designs are universal both in their origin and in their destination, without for a moment losing aesthetic contact with the place, the climate, the people for whom most immediately the building was created. (See illustration on page 255.)

The modern tradition in American architecture can never be reduced to any of the current forms of know-nothingism or isolationism: for though the roots of an organic architecture will lie deep in our soil, our occupations, our people, our institutions, the atmosphere that surrounds it will, by the mere turning of the earth, carry freshening currents from every other country on earth, and in turn spread further what is universal and viable in our own tradition. Our inner strength and our potential service to humanity lies in this fact. We are most deeply ourselves, we Americans who have come together from every other land, when we are most fully part of a world-wide community. That, too, is one of the lessons of the American Tradition in architecture. If we understand that lesson, and apply it resolutely in every sphere, we may again be at the beginning of good days.

THERE ARE TWO KINDS OF MAGAZINES

One is the kind you're reading now. It carries entertainment, education, and projects the American way of life. The other is the kind our GIs are using in Korea. That one carries explosives, firearms, and the last-resort weapons against communism.

It's only the dictator's damper on free expression, as voiced in our paper magazines, that forces us to keep our powder dry in the steel ones. If the world had more access to the printed ammunition, it would have less need for the primed.

You can help fight communism with this magazine by sending it, together with others which depict the American way of life, to our potential friends abroad. It costs only an average of sixteen cents per pound to mail the millions of copies wasted each week—that many humane weapons against tyranny.

You'll need details. You can get them—in the form of organizations and addresses by writing:

QUICK COMFORT

HOME HEATING

Remember last winter? Was your home hard to heat...slow to warm up in the morning...some rooms always cold? Did it cost you an arm and a leg for fuel? Don't go through another miserable winter with a furnace that picks your pocket because it's worn-out, inefficient and out-moded. This winter let G-E Automatic Heating keep you warm and comfortable. It can pay for itself in fuel savings—reported as high as 50% by happy owners. These unique quick heat features are the key to G. E.'s superiority:

G-E Oil Boiler—Heat to radiators in 5 to 7 minutes from cold start. "Turn-Back Flame" burns the oil completely for big fuel savings.

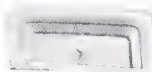

G-E Oil Furnace—Instant heat transfer by G. E.'s "Spiraflo" section from flame to room air assures oil-saving quick comfort.

G-E Gas Furnace—Fast heat with efficient cast-iron "Pinpoint" heat sections that squeeze heat fast from burning gas.

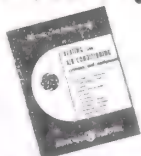

G-E Gas Boiler—Heat in a jiffy! Special "Zig-zag" passages with hundreds of tiny boilers give you all the heat you pay for.

The new trend in Patterned Fabrics

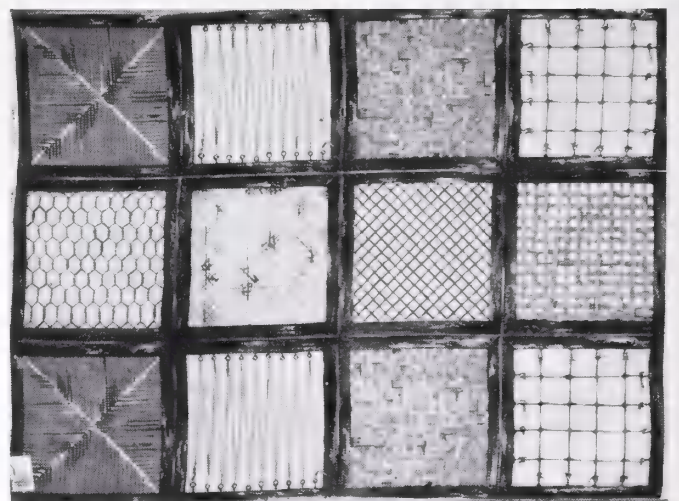

Look for these symptoms of our changing taste in patterned fabrics:

Fresh, new motifs, usually suggested by nature, often inspired by common objects never before considered "serious" enough for home furnishings design. Anything good goes—eggs, feathers, fish, chicken wire—as long as its form is pleasing. New, imaginative interpretations of old motifs. The hackneyed photographic bouquets, which used to stress the rose, are giving place to impressionistic, freely drawn versions of all kinds of flowers, shown with all kinds of things.

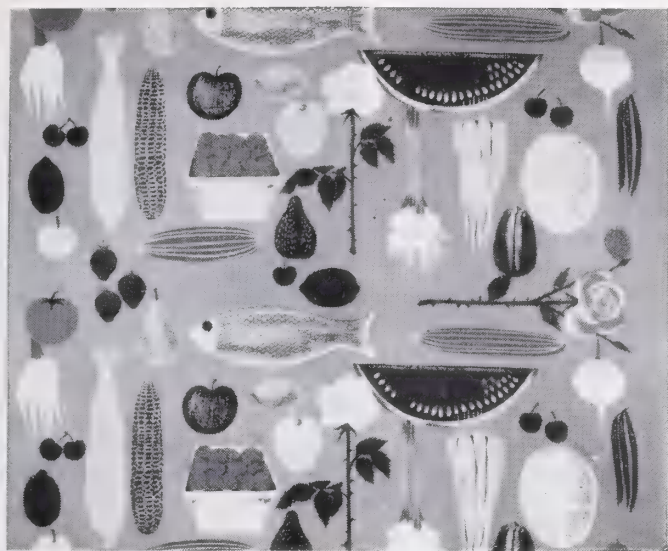

The look of texture, sometimes in a pattern directly copying a texture, sometimes in pictorial patterns with motifs so arranged as to look textured and abstract when draped.

Patterns drawn in a variety of fine art techniques, many designed by fine artists. Look for free lines and brush strokes, asymmetric spacing, an abstract, rather than representational, approach unlike the tight, more obviously spaced patterns of the past.

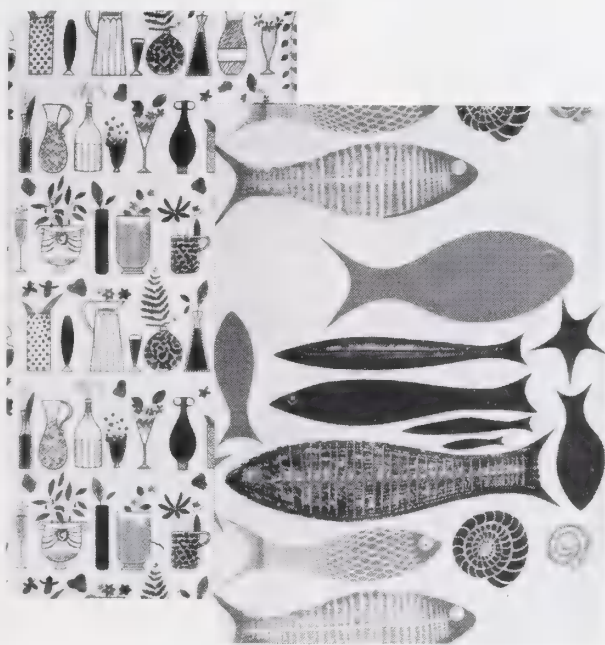

Colorings of nature, often in very low-key contrast.

Everyday textures that you either look through or see underfoot have been vividly portrayed down to the last nail, knot, and screw eye, in a paneled design on linen. Called "Peek-a-Boo," Quaintance.

Here is a trend toward the "still life" of fine art; incongruous but pleasant groupings of nature objects, a rose alongside a fish, a basket of strawberries beside an ear of corn. Quaintance's "Buffet."

Once the plume was a pompous symbol of luxury. Today's plumes and feathers are "familiar" objects drawn realistically. Their "shadows" simulate texture. "Fine Feathered Friends" from Quaintance.

happiest, most-living friends would answer that question for us, as they have answered it for themselves, they would confer upon us one of the greatest of all favors.

The professional psychologists don't help much. Their world of "perceptions" and "apperceptions," of Wundt's law and minimum stimulac, seems terribly remote from the living stuff of experience. Much of the time they seem to be getting further and further away from the joyous immersion in living which is what we really want. Nevertheless there is one hint at least they can give—that there is a possible and an impossible way of cultivating our attention.

The impossible way is the one which we are most likely to try first. It is what they call "voluntary attention," an effort of the will which cannot possibly last long. All of us have seen this method fail. The victim is grimly determined on self-improvement. He may possibly be trying to cultivate a palate or to admire a sunset, but he is more likely to be aiming at what he is sure are "higher" things. We see him in the concert hall composing his expression into what he believes to be suitable for one about to receive a tremendous experience. For once he is really going to listen. He banishes from his mind every wandering thought. He is all ears, all alertness. No one could possibly be more eager and determined to be alert.

But his state of alertness lasts about five seconds. The strain of this unnatural psychic posture is intolerable. Almost before he has determined to hold it he is aware of nothing, except perhaps that what he has been attempting is impossible. Neither the human mind nor the human sensibilities work that way.

William James, one of the least technical and one of the most humanly usable of psychologists, warned in his own words against just that sort of thing. But he also pointed the way out. The voluntary attention which is an effort gives way to involuntary attention which is not, just as soon as we find ourselves interested. And interest can be cultivated if mere abstract attention cannot. Try, he said, to attend steadfastly to a dot on a piece of paper. After a second or two, either it will have become a blur or you will be looking at something else. But if, instead of merely attending, you ask yourself successive questions about it—how big it is, how far away, of what shape, of what color—you can keep your mind on it until the limited possibilities of one dot have been exhausted.

Fortunately the possibilities of most things in this world are by no means so limited. But the same method will work. The proper approach to either a flavor or a symphony is neither the simple question, "Do I like it?", nor the priggish resolution, "I am determined to like it because it is said to be fine." The proper approach is William James's approach to the dot on a piece of paper. "What questions can I ask; what answers can I get?"

Something like that is what we all do in connection with anything which, as we say, "interests us." We do not merely attend to it blankly. We unconsciously ask ourselves questions about it. There is no person who does not exhibit this sort of interest in some thing. No man buying an automobile, or a simple, practical housewife selecting a crib for her baby, would do either without that questioning kind of attention they never think of devoting to a picture, a piece of music, or a wine for their table. The one thing interests them; the other does not. And if they have sometimes made an effort to cultivate an interest, they have always failed because they have gone about it in the wrong way.

Interest grows with the power of discrimination and the power of discrimination can be cultivated. No one can be interested in pictures if he has never really looked. (Continued on page 265)

at one, or in music if he has never really heard any. Neither can anyone make himself interested by being merely determined to be so, or by merely voluntary efforts of pure attention. But he can learn to discriminate, and he will find that where he has learned to do so he will usually be interested.

The proper beginning is not "Do I like Burgundy better than Claret? Or Mozart better than Brahms?" Even more positively it is not "I am going to like this thing better than that thing because I am told that I ought to."

The proper beginning is "How does the taste of Burgundy differ from that of Claret, and the sound of Mozart from the sound of Brahms?" To such questions as these one can actually attend. And the more answers one gets the more interested one will be.

Is it worth the effort? No one, who has ever added one genuine interest to his living, has ever doubted that it is. To do so is like being given a new sense, almost like being introduced to a new world. It is really the only way of adding to one's possessions, the only way of becoming richer.

On some such principles as these, new and more useful How to Do books may some day be written. From the wine cellar and the kitchen to the highest reaches of poetry and art, the principles are essentially the same. Connoisseurship is applicable to every department of the art of life. Perhaps the time will come when it will be said of Americans not only that they have everything, but that they know how to appreciate it.

One need not start with the things remotest from one's present interests. Perhaps not everyone is capable of appreciating all the arts. Some poets have been tone deaf; some musicians have lacked much appreciation for the power of words. Thus Thoreau did not care what he ate and Charles Lamb said he would just as soon never see another mountain in his life. But there are few people who need be, as many people are, incapable of real delight in anything, and few who could not practice a congenial art better than they do. But the first thing to be remembered is this: It is not awareness which generates the power to discriminate, but the other way around. To begin to discriminate is to begin to be aware.

If you have a family of hearty eaters, you'll welcome a new Roper gas range. For it has an auxiliary oven built into the top of the range where you can reach it without bending. This petite

Used in conjunction with the regular full size oven, it is handy when there are party meals to be prepared.

Here's Where

Plywood adds extra value to your home

And Here's Why!

In the recent "better living home" competition which drew a record 2,727 entries from architects the nation over, durable Exterior plywood siding was specified in 3 of the top 4 house designs. Ask your architect, builder or dealer about the advantages of this modern material for every building or remodeling job... waterproof-bond EXTERIOR for all outdoor uses, INTERIOR for all inside applications.

In the hidden structural parts of your home—roof decking, wall sheathing, subflooring—strength and rigidity are all-important.

And here's where plywood pays off! Plywood's unique "two-way" strength—made possible because plywood is real wood, cross-laminated to give strength in both panel dimensions—means extra value all down the line.

Plywood is more than twice as strong and rigid as conventional sheathing materials. It gives extra protection against storm or earthquake. It means firm, solid, stable construction. Holds nails like a vise... insulates... seals out unwelcome drafts.

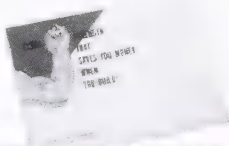

Saves money, too! Plywood cuts building time and labor—speeds work by 25% to 50% because the big panels cover large areas quickly, eliminate expensive waste. Ask your architect, builder or retail lumber dealer!

Don't let the dishes get you down. Moreover, don't be content with anything less than clinical cleanliness for these things that come in contact with your food. American Kitchens has come out with a new dishwasher called the "Roto-Tray," with a circular revolving upper rack which turns freely with the motion of the water. Thus the streams of water can get at the surface of every dish. Dishwasher has electric heating element to raise water temperatures during wash and rinse cycles for antiseptic results.

Do you still drive a horse and buggy? Do you still scrub and polish your floors on hands and knees? It's high time you learned about the Regina electric twin brush polisher and scrubber.

You can use it on wood, linoleum, tile, other hard surfaces. And scrubbing (wherever that is needed), waxing, polishing, and buffing. One of its best features is that you can get into corners and up baseboards with it. If your problem is reconditioning old floors, you can get an extra kit for this purpose. Light weight, easy to guide.

Anyone concerned with the appearance of her laundry as well as its functioning, will welcome the new Bendix "pen pair" washer and dryer. The two appliances exactly match in sign and dimension. Also, they fit flush against the wall, without dirt-catching cracks, or unsightly plumbing connections. You can dial of tumble-action washer to adjust temperature to degree specified for safe washing of synthetic fibers like nylon, Orlon. Dryer provides maximum of air, minimum of heat for handling new fabrics.

nutritional, medical, and psychological care. People still want to be superior. But our ideas of what constitutes superiority have taken new forms.

At one time, ruffled lace, lawn, or chiffon curtains were expensive to buy—and more expensive to keep clean. With nylon and Orlon and fibrous glass, this is no longer true. So elaborate curtains have lost half their attraction—which is to say, their social significance.
Moreover, well-designed windows or walls of glass, with outside night lighting, are changing even the function of curtains. They are becoming light-filtering devices and glare controllers rather than the warmth producers they were.

We see every evidence that people are turning toward the New, regardless of whether the person lives in an apartment, a rented house, or a new house. I believe that people are motivated by the concepts and values of the newest and best houses—even though they are not planning to build or even to move. There is a smell in the air of our society that is making people change in the general direction in which others are changing—something in the total social environment which is so pervading and compulsive that certain things suddenly seem fresh and desirable, and we want to fit them into our old lives and in among our old possessions. We are all being exposed to the sun of new social conditions, and are all responding to the exposure of the same infrared rays—each according to his nature. All this adds up to social change and, consequently, style and taste change.

The main characteristics of this new shift in taste are briefly summarized earlier in this issue (on pages 174 and 175). Here is an expansion of those points, with some of the rationale which caused us to arrive at these conclusions.

This new taste cycle will be characterized by the domination of the architecture over the furnishings. It used to be just the opposite, when plain boxy rooms had to be given interest through the use of ornamented furnishings. Now that modern architecture has matured and is coming into flower, we are getting our design interest and pattern

from the structural lines and the structural materials. It is the background that matters most now, and will continue to matter more and more. You might say it is the domination of the container over the contained.

Furniture is becoming basic in style, like the "little, classic black dress." You can use the same pieces (with equal appropriateness) either indoors or out, in bedrooms or living rooms—depending on how you accessorize them. You dress a room up or down, according to the accessories chosen—but not with the furniture. Furniture has become more a thing to use than to ornament with. Furniture, therefore, is being judged primarily by its usefulness.

We establish the character of a room, or convey a mood by the way we use accessories. Accessories do not need to be in the same "style" as the furniture or the architecture. Consequently, furniture is becoming an adjunct, a subsidiary to other elements—to the architecture, to the accessories, and to the way of life.

This means we will increasingly prefer our furniture to be plain, since it cannot possibly compete for our attention with the larger-scale pattern of the architecture. Therefore, furniture design will be unobtrusive, will not proclaim itself, or posture for attention. We will put high value on furniture that "melts into the background."

Interpreting this theory more concretely, I predict that storage pieces (chests, dressers, etc.) will look more and more like architectural built-ins, and will continue to borrow their appearance from architectural detailing. Free-standing furniture, as opposed to furniture against the wall, is becoming more gracefully designed, more flowing, more rounded, more sculptural, more delicately scaled. The pieces that stand out in the open floor space will be best liked if they are transparent, which is to say delicately scaled. For, in the small, more glassy houses, which will be the predominant type of house of the future, furniture that visually crowds the space it occupies will not be liked, because it makes the room seem too small.

Already, the stores can show examples of what I am talking about: the precise, engineered, architectural chests and drawers, the "room dividers" that make the visual gesture of being structural partitions, the magnificent, softly curved, sculptured chairs.

Furniture that stands against the wall will be wanted in woods and colors that blend with the architecture, for if we want them to seem to merge with the background, they need to be made of materials which are sympathetic to the structure.

There is a strong, growing trend toward merging the indoors and outdoors, through big windows and glass walls. This is having a very great effect on home furnishings, for it fortunately belies the real size of the room—making the room larger than it really is. The paved terrace outside the glass wall, which is being furnished more and more like a room, is having a very substantial effect on the furniture inside the house. The trend is to give these two areas (the inside room and the outside roofless room) the same, or visually similar, furniture to make both areas seem to be on big space. (See "Peace and Ease—the Style Trend in Landscape Design," on pages 208-209).

This is no fluke or whim, but a basic change in attitude brought about by our changing attitude concerning the house itself, and the economic stricture of rising building costs. Homeowners are discovering the value of creating the illusion that the living room extends to the far outer edge of the terrace, or to the screen planting of the fence at the lot line. They are discovering that they can disguise the smallness of a small house by decorating it as though the glass wall were not there.

As a result, you can clearly see a trend to unify the appearance of the inside of the house with the outside, and the outside with the inside. This produces many by-products: It is changing the colors and materials of our floors; it is also substantially changing the way we paint our houses both inside and out; it is affecting the kind of patterns we are using for wall and draperies. The best-selling home furnishings of the last three years show conclusively that the most wanted merchandise makes use of outdoor colors, outdoor materials, outdoor textures, outdoor patterns. In short, our newest possessions are reminiscent, in all respects, of the landscape.

Growing out of this is another related fact. There is an equal pronounced trend away from patterned merchandise to textured merchandise. The swing in texture exists in all classifications, and is clearly the single biggest factor in our study of the Best Sellers. Texture, real or simulated, is the "winning" common denominator that runs through all of the top furnishing sales. Texture is a sure way best seller, particularly in the last twelve months. I predict this tendency will become more so, rather than less so. For it fits with everything else that is happening. It is a logical part of our willingness to let the structure be the pattern, and let the over-all form create the design, rather than to let the design come from a surface application of pattern. This is also part of our fast-developing sense for the love of the real nature of materials—an idea started about 50 years ago by Frank Lloyd Wright, which has been coming into full flower, particularly since the war.

STRONGLY recommend that you open your eyes to natural materials. Look at them as though you were seeing them for the first time. There is good reason why the top sellers in decorating merchandise have been, for three years, reducing the look, the color, and the use of natural materials. The uses of rocks and bark are extremely popular in fabric lines. Wallpapers that either are or look like grass cloth sell so fast that they cannot be kept in stock by big-volume wallpaper companies. Other best-selling wallpapers are copying the look of rough-sawn woods, even down to the smallest imperfections. No matter how you look at it, the most wanted wallpaper shows the high popularity of texture—of texture that gives the realistic impression of natural materials: bamboo, wood splits, grass, striated wood, and the like. The closer they come to looking like the real thing, the more popularity they seem to be.

This trend toward texture is beginning to show up even in the furniture field. In the work of the designers who "set the pace" for the rest of the furniture trade, there is a pronounced turning toward woods with random markings, with irregular grains, with light and dark effects in the grain. Likewise, high-style decorators who do custom-designing are featuring the natural irregularities of the wood. Woods that used to be discarded as unfit for use because of their lack of uniformity are becoming the most wanted woods. To many, this may seem ironic. For, ever since the industrial revolution, we have set great store by mechanical uniformity. But, now, uniformity has become so common, we prize it no longer.

Don't misunderstand me. I am not speaking of crudity or rusticity. I am predicting that, whenever the natural variations of a material are featured, highlighted, played up, and turned to account in the design, we will be pleased and delighted. And I predict this tendency will become more so rather than less so. So clear your mind of old preconceptions. Look with new eyes at the irregular, the striated, the random marking, the moiréd grain, the cross-cut burl, the nubbly, the three-dimensional effect. This is the new characteristic that is replacing the antique or "distressed" finish. Look for beauty in the textures and natural patterns native to all materials. (See "A Liking for Texture," pages 188-189 and "Texture by Illusion," pages 190-191.)

AS OUR tastes swing away from things that have a mechanical look, there result other side-effects. One pronounced side-effect is occurring in free-standing furniture. As I said before, there is a trend toward designs with flowing, sculptured lines, particularly in chairs. As a result, the free-standing chair is entering a period of gracefulness and beauty that may very well come to be regarded as the greatest in history. Because such chairs are seen from all sides, they have been designed with more care than chairs which are to be viewed from only the front. These sculptured chairs are good enough to be regarded as art. Indeed they show the pronounced effect of modern sculpture, of the work of men like Brancusi. The influence of modern sculpture also shows up in the new designs in china, glass, and silver.

There has been a great change in the colors we like and the way we like to combine color. The most liked colors are those that prevail in the landscape—the greens of foliage and grass, the browns and grays of soil, bark, and rocks. The color schemes that we like combine colors of low contrast—almost monochromatic, you might say. Subtle, sophisticated color combinations characterize the new trend—not the vivid, obvious, high-contrast schemes that typified the period before the war. This preference for understated colors and schemes has been growing ever since the war, and shows no evidence of reversing itself for some time. I predict that these preferences will last, as a trend, until the majority of our homes have achieved their own personal version of this new, muted color palette, at which point the style trend will become stabilized and in equilibrium (as prewar color preferences were in equilibrium for the decade before Pearl Harbor). Then, and not before, will color tastes begin to change and a new trend begin to build up. But I see at least five or ten years ahead for the development of this particular color phase.

There's one conclusion you can make from all this. Tastes are changing for the better—toward a freer, more natural, more personal, less rule-ridden way of life. As a result, there is a unity and a consistency about the merchandise that is selling best in America. Every part of the picture fits with everything else, and the sum total is beautiful, sound, and good.

All in all, it is a good time to be furnishing a home, for the style and taste decisions you make now

Above, example of "trompe l'oeil" design, a realistic rendering of common objects in a shadow box. Technique of shadowing adds textured, abstract look when fabric is draped. Jofa's "Shadow and Substance."

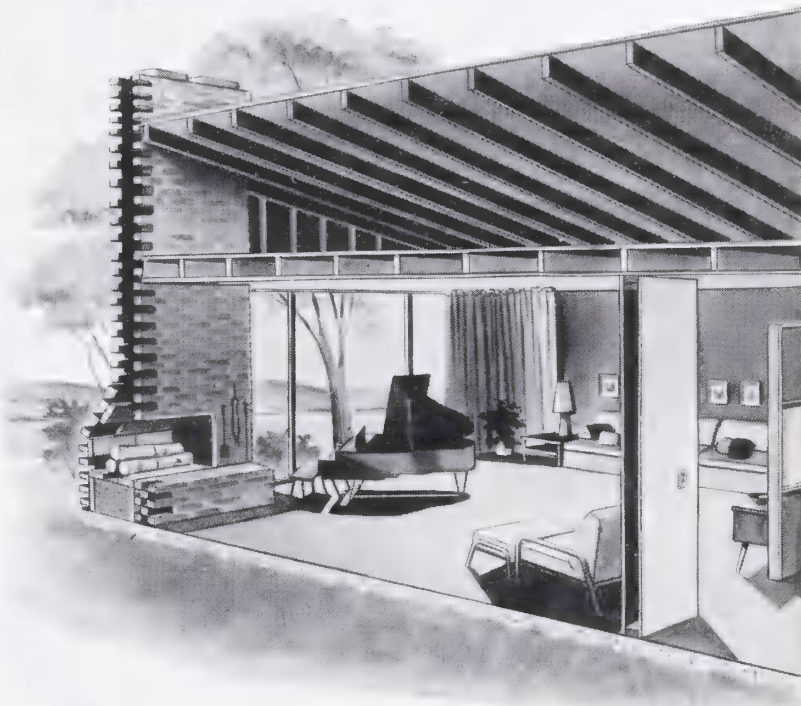

The old "central bouquet" has given way to a freer, less set design, like this one of vegetables in a scale. Colorings in this and other trend-setter fabrics are subdued, unusual. "One for Good Measure," Quaintance.

Another technique in the newer fabrics, design on top of design—a thin almost spidery drawing of common objects on a textured-looking plaid. Draped, it looks both realistic and abstract. Quaintance's "Square Dance."

Don't buy a half home!

HEAT your home in winter . . . and COOL IT IN SUMMER, TOO!

Servel does both with one complete unit

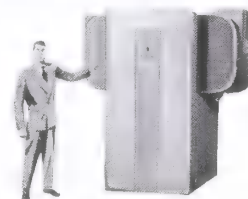

Yes . . . without complete temperature and humidity control in the hot months as well as the cold, you'll be buying only a half home according to modern building practice. That's why Servel All-Year Air Conditioning, the modern method of complete weather control, deserves such a vital place in your building or remodeling plans.

Unlike ordinary units which air-condition in winter only and just circulate the air in summer, Servel conditions the air throughout your home all year long at low cost. In cold weather your Servel All-Year Home Air Conditioning heats the air, cleans, humidifies and circulates it. In hot weather it cools the air by refrigeration, cleans, dehumidifies and circulates it.

Whatever indoor climate you want is yours at the flick of a switch! The compact Servel unit heats and cools quietly and economically, with gas or oil—has no moving parts in either the cooling or heating system. Reasons enough why more Servel All-Year Home Air Conditioning is in use today than all other makes combined!

Whether you're planning to build or buy a new home or remodel your present home—investigate Servel. Ask your architect or builder or write Servel, Inc., Dept. C10, Evansville 20, Ind.

PANTRY SHELF NEWS

By Julie Polshek

An imaginative food house in Atlanta creates delectable cocktail snacks out of fried and puffed bacon strips flavored with garlic, cheese, and onion. A fourth variety of Filler's Bake-N-Krisp gives you the rind's delicate savor in an au naturel state. Not as novel as the flavored types, perhaps, but just as outstanding in its own right. The shoestring-cut strips, whatever flavor you choose, are as crisp as potato chips and so airy in texture they virtually melt in your mouth. They're so completely greaseless that you'd take them for a toasted tidbit if you didn't know their raw origin.

The vacuum-sealed jars keep the fried strips crisp and fresh biding their appearance on the cocktail tray. I assure you there'll be no left-overs to worry about once a jar is opened. The likely problem will be to keep pace with the consumption. One of our staff members enlisted as a taster, "sampled" his way to the bottom of the jar.

Give the tasty tidbits a whirl as an addition to an omelet or salad, in crumbled form. They're a delicious addition to corn bread, too, and as a garnish for soups. I ventured with the garlic variety in a cheese soufflé and the result brought high compliments.

Those who can't find Bake-N-Krisp locally, can order it from Charles & Co., 340 Madison Avenue, New York. The postpaid price of four jars (3-ounce) is $2 (assorted or four of one flavor).

If you haven't caught up with the Cocktail Delight cheese spreads sold in tubes that dispense it ornamental form, I think you want to get acquainted with the. The innovation certainly makes easy to whip up festive canapés. And from a downright practical standpoint, you're saved the both of spreading the cheese.

The cheese spreads, themselves have unusual interest, too. You can have Roquefort in brandy, Edam in sauterne, Cheddar in port; other two give you a mixture of caviar and cheese or anchovy and cheese. There's also a small Cheddar and a sharp Cheddar and finally, Camembert.

As long as the tubed cheese remains unopened, it's as non-perishable as tinned food, and does even have to be refrigerated. It can be kept for quite a while, unrefrigerated, after it's opened. The fact that the tube and the cap made of plastic is pertinent, with regard to this storage matter. And, of course, the subject of the spreads shouldn't be closed with comment on the cheeses themselves. They're excellent.

If you can't find them local, order by mail from Gimbel's, Herald Square, New York. Edam sauterne, anchovy Cheddar in port cost 49¢ a tube (2-1/4 oz.); small Cheddar, 55¢; Roquefort, 55¢; Camembert, 55¢ (add 17¢ post in all cases; minimum order $1).

A stellar attraction of New Orleans, as everyone knows, is the cuisine of its Creole-French restaurants. One of these well-known establishments, La Louisiane, has some of "specialties of the house"

anned form so you can enjoy in your own dining room if can't visit the restaurant. Each is, within canning limitations, identical to the dish you'd served if you ordered it at La Louisiane. The restaurant's own prepare the canned wares. are all interesting, flavored to perfection, and prepared from fine, authentic Creole recipes. I wish there were space for more than the descriptions that follow to you make a choice for your shelf.

Chicken Chanticleir contains chicken and mushrooms sautéed in a thickened sauce. (15-oz. can $1.) Redfish Court-bouillon contains large slices of redfish in a zesty Creole sauce. (15-oz. can $2.15.) Lobster à la Meunière is made of the tail portion of Florida lobsters, sautéed in butter sauce. (15-oz. can $2.15.) Pinot Vin Blanc has an aromatic, light sauce, lavishly stocked with lake shrimp. (15-oz. can $2.15.) The other delicacies available are pretty much explained by their names: Turtle Stew (15-oz. can $2.15), Crayfish Bisque (15-oz. can $1.90), Oyster Soup gently filled with Louisiana Bayou oysters (15-oz. can $1.85), Gumbo à la Louisiane Seafood (2 cans, 10-oz., $1.50), Shrimp Louisiane (2 cans, $1.50). The restaurant's fine version of Sauce de Piment Rouge for meats and seafood and Remoulade Sauce, which mustardy dressing used primarily for sea-food salads, cost $1.15 and $1.25 a pint, respectively. Louisiana also has a Delicacy-of-the-Month club and gift assortment that might solve some of your Christmas problems. Orders for correspondence should be addressed to La Louisiane, 725 Rue Poydras, New Orleans 16.

who follow these columns will recall my report last September on an all-purpose blend of herbs created by Anderson and a wild-garlic salt augmented by the same herb blend. Flash-back leads me to two recent Anderson Farm creations built around the same herb blend. It's become sort of a basic so to speak. One of the delicacies is a peppercorn cocktail sauce that dresses up other sea foods to tangy perfection and combined with mayonnaise, gives new-found sparkle to chicken or sea-food salad. It's a dunk par excellence, either alone or combined with sour cream. Along with the herb-blend, the superbly flavored concoction contains tomatoes, vinegar, mustard, spices, and just a dash of sugar that sharpens flavors of the condiments without adding perceptible sweetness. It's zest is assertive without being aggressive.

The second creation is a unique curry sauce, blended to perfection, that affords an alternate for the cocktail sauce in all the named roles and a way to impart curried flavoring to any manner of cuisine. It can be used in the cooking or at the table. Its base is a tangy mustard sauce and to that, Mr. Anderson adds a number of exotic curry condiments together with the aforementioned herb blend. The end result is superb.

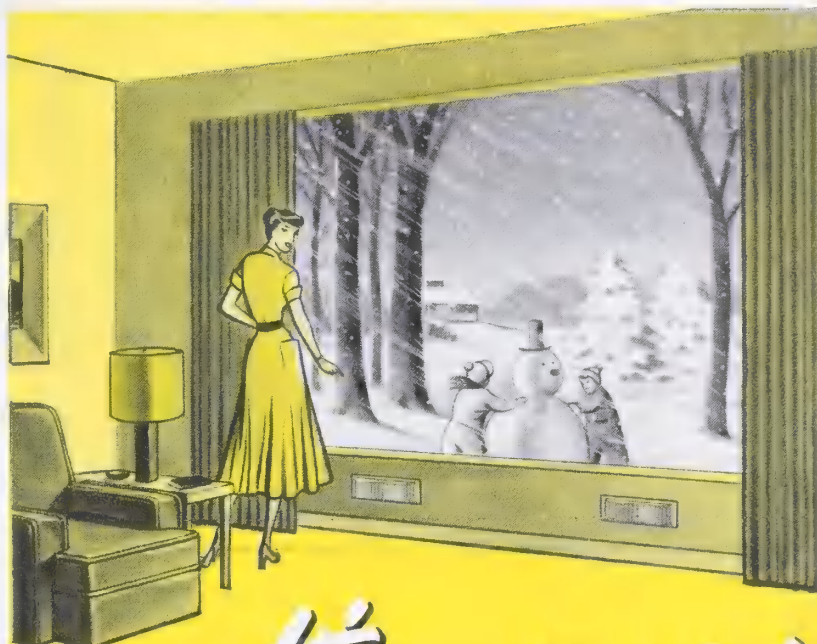

Two jars of either type of sauce, or assorted, cost $1.70 postpaid, (10% additional west of Mississippi), from Anderson Farm, Tinticum, Pennsylvania.

Canapés that please the eye have an extra measure of palate appeal, as with all foods. You can achieve it in trouble-free fashion with a patty-shell-like biscuit imported from England. Actually, it's easier to spoon whatever paste you want to use into Crawford's U-Fillit than it is to spread it on a cracker or toast round. And to get even more practical, it gives you a device that permits leftovers to be blended into an hors d'oeuvre filling.

The biscuits are as tasty as they're decorative. They're made of a flaky dough that's much like puff-paste, and baked in forms that scallop their sides. The top has a little cut-out that you lift out to create a well for the filling. The cut-outs don't go to waste; you'll find they also can play a decorative role one way or another.

The tin-box packing and corrugated paper that separate the layered biscuits keep the contents fresh and crisp for a long while. Fifty U-Fillits to a box. Order by mail for $1.60 postpaid per box from Maison Glass, 15 E. 47th St., New York City, if you don't find them in your local fine-food shops.

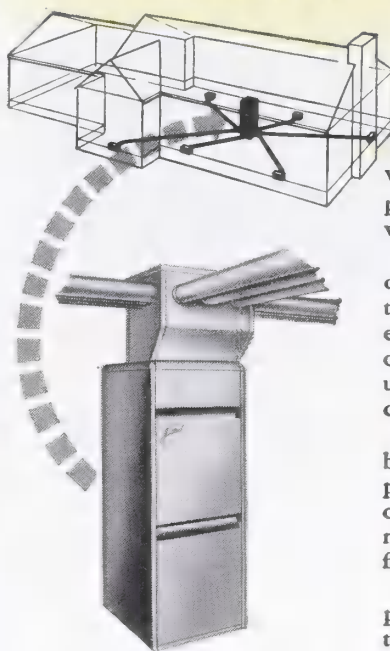

A unique mushroom, no larger than the end of your finger, is an interesting new importation from Switzerland. The tiny fungi grow wild in Europe, especially in the Swiss area, and their flavor is quite different from mushrooms known in this country. It's a savor that's both delicate and pungent, and has a certain earthiness. A paradoxical description, I realize, but it's virtually impossible to paint a word-picture. (Continued on next page) ture of a flavor that both resembles and differs from the usual mushroom. You use Mushrooms Pfifferlinge for such things as a steak-garnish, an omelette, as an ingredient in a tossed green salad, to stuff tomatoes. I'm told that they would not be good for chicken à la king, for instance, or similar concoctions in which mushrooms are used. Such uses put the flavors of both the mushrooms and the concoction itself to a disadvantage. You must be completely confused by now. One way to clarify the entire matter is to try the mushrooms for yourself. They're most interesting and, used in the suggested ways, a delicious adjunct. You can also sauté them and serve them as a side-dish.

If Mushrooms Pfifferlinge are not available in your local shops, mail orders will be filled by B. Altman & Co., Fifth Ave. at 34th St., New York. The price for three 4-oz. cans is $2 (plus postage).

These days when meat prices loom high, an agent that tenderizes meat is something to look into. The one put out under the Adolph label merits singling out on many scores. Its dry form, in my opinion, has great value over a liquid. It's more convenient to use, for one thing, since the preparation is housed in a shaker and you apply it as you would salt. It should be done at least a half-hour before cooking, or it can be applied the night before, so the meat will be ready to take to the stove when removed from the refrigerator. It's just as effective for tenderizing fowl as for roasts, steaks, and other meat cuts. With fowl you want to fry, it can be added to the flouring. Meat shrinkage seems to be lessened, too, and cooking time as well. Important also, is the fact that the papaya enzyme that does the tenderizing doesn't alter the flavor of the meat or leave a taste of its own. Many will also be interested to know that it's the only product of its kind to be accorded the Seal of Acceptance by the American Medical Association's Advertising Committee.

Two versions of the product are available: one that's supplemented with a fine blend of meat-seasonings and one that gives you tenderizer only.

The product is quite widely distributed, but if your local shop doesn't have it, you can order it directly from Adolph's Food Products, Los Angeles 46, California. The price per shaker-jar is $1.

Those who are on low-sodium diets may also be interested in a new salt substitute launched recently by this same organization. It has the endorsement of the Los Angeles Heart Association and has been accepted for advertising publications of the American Medical Association.

In my opinion, it possesses greater similarity to true salt than any salt substitute I've encountered, and also greater ability to sharpen the flavor of the food. The latter is accomplished by the monopotassium glutamate incorporated in the compound—a salt-free form of monosodium glutamate. Another feature that's important to my way of thinking (and I speak from personal experience where salt-diets are concerned) is that the effectiveness of the salt substitute isn't diminished when used in cooking. On the contrary, the cooking seems to increase its powers. Monopotassium glutamate is likely responsible for this fact. This product, too, is available from the maker, if you wish. A 5-ounce jar costs $1.75.

Mail address is Adolph's Food Products, Box 8616, Los Angeles 46, California.

Used in pairs by the fireplace, love seats make conversation easy, and are likely to consume less floor space than other types of seating which accommodate four people in comparable comfort. This one, designed by Ole Wanscher, and Danish made, measures 48". John Stuart.

Measure your room for a LOVE SEAT

You'll be surprised how little space it takes, and how neatly it can solve your seating problems

By Mary Roche

Ask anyone you know to list the basic pieces needed to furnish a living room and chances are they'll answer very nearly as follows: a sofa and a couple of easy chairs plus a coffee table. What they're almost sure to forget is a love seat. But, depending on the size and shape of your room, a love seat may very well turn out to be the missing piece in your seating puzzle. So forget its popularity as a decorator's piece—something to fill up a blank corner or complete a color scheme—and consider it as a strictly functional factor in the arithmetic of seating.

Love seats range in length from 48 to 55 inches and seat two persons. Sofas, ranging from 72 to 80 inches are designed to seat three. (But as soon as the conversation starts, the man in the middle has either to turn a cool shoulder to one of his neighbors or wag his head to and fro like an umpire in a tennis match.) So if you'd like to expand your conversation group but think you have no room, get out the yardstick and measure all the spaces you've given up as useless. Probably a love seat can put at least one of them to work.

Flexscreen—beauty on duty! It enriches the fascinating beauty of the fireplace—contentment center of your home—insures serene enjoyment undisturbed by flying sparks. MEASURE YOUR ROOM FOR A LOVE SEAT

The curve of a grand piano makes a graceful background for a curved-line love seat, such as this one by Mueller, which helps relate the piano area to other parts of the room. A love seat can often draw into conversation range an area which would otherwise be dead space.

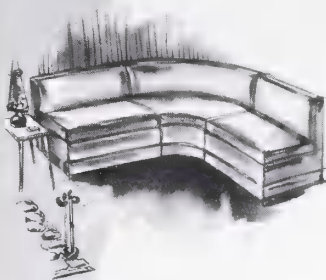

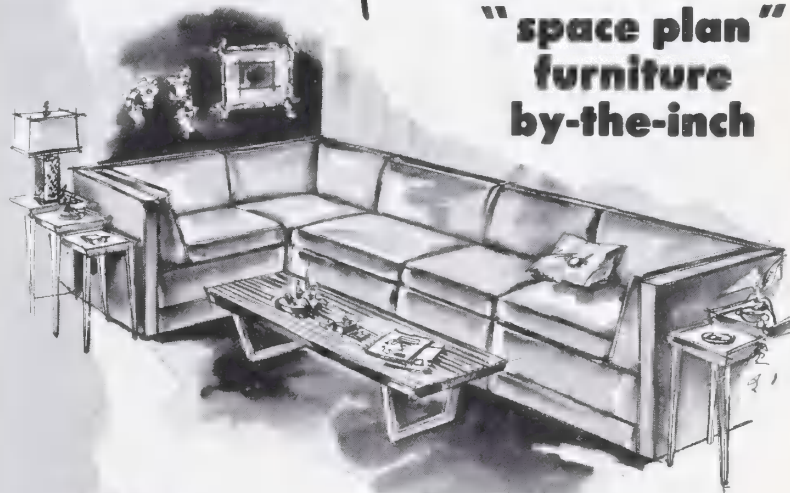

In the nursery, visiting uncles will welcome a comfortable place to sit while admiring your offspring. A love seat doesn't rob the children of too much play space, may be upholstered in practical plastic. This one by Selig is priced within a nursery-sized budget.

DECORATING ADVICE BY MAIL

If you're decorating or refurnishing your home, House Beautiful offers you this personal service

How many times have you said: "If I could only talk to someone who really knows decorating, I could whip that room into shape"? Well, here is your big opportunity. HOUSE BEAUTIFUL is offering you the consulting services of Elaine Neal, an expert who knows the home furnishings field inside out.

This is not a service handled by a department or a group of people. It is a truly personal service done by one person for one person. In other words, every room is visualized as a unit and seen through one pair of eyes from start to finish. We believe that this is the only way to achieve a thoroughly satisfying room scheme. But so personal and complete a service is not a matter of a few minutes' thought and the typing of a form letter. Before a line can be written, your problem calls for thoughtful evaluation, experiment with color and furniture placement, and a re-evaluation of our suggested solution before it is sent to you. All this takes time. And since so many readers turn to Mrs. Neal for advice, we urge you to allow her plenty of time to give you her best efforts.

Mrs. Neal tries to get her answers out as promptly as possible, of course, and this usually means within three or four weeks. But at certain seasons—particularly in the spring and fall—the mail piles up at such a rate that the time lapse can be quite long. And the only fair thing is to answer the letters in their proper turn. Therefore, we ask you to be patient with us should your answer not reach you within the three-or four-week limit.

Try to send in your plans and information well ahead of the date by which you wish to complete your rooms, and follow carefully the directions on the opposite page.

Johns-Manville
Spintex INSULATION
A ROCK WOOL PRODUCT

This is what you should send us:

1. Send us a floor plan drawn to 1/4-inch scale, showing window and door placements, giving measurements and dimensions, ceiling height, and distances fireplace or jogs extend from wall. Indicate the location of radiation, pipes, and electric outlets. Tell us the kind of windows you have, whether sash or casement, small or large panes, the distance of sills from the floor. Tell us in what direction the windows face, and if the room is light or dark.
2. List your favorite colors, and tell us which styles of decoration and furniture you prefer. Describe the furnishings you wish to keep and what you desire to buy new. Tell us whether your taste leans to wallpaper or paint.
3. Describe your location, whether city, suburban, or country. If there is a particular condition which must affect your choice of furnishings, please mention it. State your problems, clearly in separate paragraphs. The more carefully you follow the instructions, the more helpful you will find the decorating advice you receive.

This is what we do for you:

1. We will send your floor plan back to you, showing your furniture arranged in a comfortable, balanced manner.
2. We will suggest color schemes and send color guide samples of wallpaper, paint colors, and fabrics. We cannot, however, guarantee fabric distribution in all regions, but our samples will serve as guides for your shopping.
3. We will suggest draperies, accessories, and the placement of pictures, mirrors, and lamps.
4. We will send you this information—four pages of it—clipped together in an orderly, easy-to-refer-to portfolio, 8" x 10". All samples will be pasted down neatly and securely on the pages so you won't mix them or lose them.

A LIKING FOR TEXTURE

Formerly, furniture woods were carefully selected for uniformity. Irregularities such as light sap streaks in dark woods were automatically discarded. Now these irregularities are highlighted, as in this table, made part of the design.

TWO PHOTOGRAPHS BY FRANK WILLMING

In both this table and the one above it, cracks between the boards are emphasized rather than disguised. This adds real texture to visual texture created by light sap streaks in walnut. Both tables designed by Edward Wormley for Dunbar.

Even furniture of traditional design is appearing in transparent finishes that reveal random markings of wood instead of hiding them to produce an illusion of uniformity. Early American table of cherry in new light finish by Statton.

Ideally you should see Sicily at leisure with your own car. Roads are good, distances short, and the Italian Line quotes shipping rates between $350 and $640 round trip until May. A bus tour circles the island in six days. Or, use the fast trains that crisscross the Tricorn, or one of those flat-rate Italian State Railway tourist tickets good for ten or twenty days anywhere in Italy, with no limitations on how far or where you travel. However you plan your Sicily maneuvers, set them up in advance. Railroad tourist tickets are available in this country only from authorized travel agents. And hotel reservations—rates from $1.50 for room without bath to $5 for room with bath—are always advisable. The Italian State Tourist Office, 21 East 51 Street, New York 22, can give you good advice and literature.

Boys again

To feel young again, turn your ear to one of these October days toward the old Mississippi River town of Hannibal, Missouri. This is Mark Twain's boyhood town, where he dreamed the dreams, and lived many of the experiences he later gave, through Tom Sawyer and Huckleberry Finn, to all boys, young and old. Hannibal, naturally, takes much of itself. Your visit will include stops at the old Clemens house, with the fence it was such a privilege to whitewash, the Mark Twain Museum next door, and Becky Thatcher's house across the street. You will want to see the Mark Twain Cave, where Tom and Becky got lost. Injun Joe died, and Tom and Huck discovered treasure. What was called Cardiff in the stories now has a remarkably vivacious statue of Tom and Huck at its foot and, higher up, the Mark Twain Memorial lighthouse overlooks the river he loved. If you arrive via U. S. 36 from the east, you will enter Hannibal over the Mark Twain Bridge. If you stay overnight, you may want to do so in the Mark Twain Hotel. And on your way either coming or going, visit Florida on State Highway 107, some 35 miles west of Hannibal. Just outside this town is the Mark Twain State Park and in it, the house where this famous novelist was born.

Hosein and Hassan

Just why Trinidad is one of the most fascinating of Caribbean islands is never more evident than during its mid-October Hosein Festival. In Trinidad, where at least eight languages are spoken, you learn quickly to expect the unexpected. In Port of Spain, its capital, mosques and minarets are as evident as French and Spanish ironwork; your take-home purchases may range from delicate filigree jewelry bought in an Indian bazaar, to an English woolen suit produced on a day's notice by a British tailor; and the most posh night spots serve up Calypso with the rum. In rural Trinidad, descendants of Negro slaves are still living on the land granted their forebears by the British because of their loyalty during the American Revolution. Communities are still named for companies in the British Army of 1776.

So it will not surprise you in the least that here Hindu joyfully joins Moslem in a Mohammedan Festival. Or that a ceremony commemorating the vicious murders of the two sons of Fatima is the occasion for much typical Caribbean gaiety. Or even to hear the throb of tomtoms behind the plaintive chants as the Hosein parade moves down the street, each float bristling with bulbous minarets and shining with colored paper, tinsel, and glass. And even if you fail to understand such incongruity, you will still find it fascinating and good reason why, at any time, your travel agent can suggest any number of ship or air tours to take you to Trinidad.

This winter . . .

The International Hotel, Frank Lloyd Wright's architectural and landscaping triumph in Tokyo, Japan, will again be free of the military and will be welcoming civilian tourists.

The Buccaneer Trail, a road which does a smooth bit of island-hopping down Florida's extreme eastern coast from Fernandina to Daytona, will enable you to bypass Jacksonville traffic, and see country that is rich in pirate lore.

Jamaica's Upton Country Club golf course, a year old and just getting well seasoned, will give you superior golfing within easy distance of most north shore resorts with nine sporty holes that will require close attention to the game, and a view that may, if you don't watch out, divert it.

The new Imperial Colon, on the Paseo de la Reforma facing Columbus Circle and opposite the American Embassy, will be one more good place to stay in the heart of Mexico City, and a solution, wherever you stay, to those important problems—where shall we go for cocktails, French food, or a snack in between.

Christiansted, on St. Croix of the Virgin Islands, will begin to show that able National Park Service influence. Those parts of this old Danish capital which are historically most significant have only recently been designated a National Historic Site, and are due for refurbishing and guide service.

Panama City's El Panama will offer for charter a new forty-foot Mathews cruiser, fully equipped with chairs, outriggers, light and heavy tackle for such excursions, say, as that to Tobago Island, where the waters abound in corbina, snapper, and mackerel.

Try Haiti for hunting as well as sight-seeing. Reports are that guinea fowl, quail, duck, doves, wild boar, and wild long-horned cattle similar to the African buffalo are there in such abundance that, at this writing at least, no bag limit has been set, no hunting license is required.

Puerto Rico visitors will find the new La Rada Hotel ready for those who like French food, a swimming pool, sun deck and solarium to use, a boat dock at hand, and an address in San Juan's fashionable Condado section.

"Helldorado"

To see a ghost town come alive before your very eyes, be in Tombstone, U.S. 80 between Bisbee and Tucson, Arizona, during Helldorado, held annually the third Friday through Sunday of October. Actually, Tombstone is a very alive town in spite of its name and reputation and its famous ghost-town relics and legends. It is normal a well ordered town, busy with people who come not just to sight see but to benefit from a combination of altitude and sunshine which are just what their doctors order. But during Helldorado, Tombstone again cuts loose as of old, and with fervor, pride, and imagination has a great time reliving its past even to the last gun-shot. Once in Earp draws on Clanton in the O.K. Corral, and John Heath, rest since 1884 in Boothill Cemetery, is enthusiastically re-lynched. Again, miner, gambler, outlaw dancing girl fill the streets, and old Tombstone lives again, and this time its glorious wickedness all in fun. It's a good show, without even the extra trouble you'll need to take to make advance reservations at any of the town's many hotels, motels, and the like—let the Chamber of Commerce help you. And it wouldn't hurt to read up a bit on our most fabulous ghost town. You'll want to know in advance what all the rootin', tootin' and shootin' is about.

King's Arms

It is typical of Virginia's Williamsburg that it reproduces faithfully not only the architectural decorations, and furnishings, boxed gardens, horse-drawn coaches, costumes, and knickknacks of the 18th Century but, at King's Arms Tavern, its food and drink. The Tavern is one of more recent accomplishments of Williamsburg Restoration. Like rest, it has been reconstructed according to old records and on original site. Also like the rest, seven dining rooms, each with its place and one with the old wicker type of bar set with original pew mugs, have been decorated and furnished with valuable antique and faithful reproductions. Your table is set with hand-blown crystal. Blue Canton china reproduces exactly from fragments unearthed at this very spot, the pistol-handled knives of the period, and your square linen napkins you may not wish to tie around your neck as the 18th-century diner. Even the luncheons and dinners served here are true to the period more so than those you may have enjoyed at Traut House, which the tavern now occupies. Your handwritten menu with carefully old fashioned "S" lists the Virginia ham and fi

Big City

That Big City visit you are planning, whether just for the sights for a bit of shopping and theater too, will be easier, more rewarding, and probably less expensive if you do it the package way. Let's face it: Big cities are complicated places, even to those who live in them. To the stranger in town, the mere processes necessary to find out where to go and how may be time-consuming and costly, and still not get you there. Ask for the increasingly common Big City package, set up by your travel agent, the railroad, airline or bus line that takes you there; secure information also from your motor club, or where you buy your gasoline. Not only does the all-expense package assure hotel reservations, make sight-seeing effortless, and, in many cases, get you hard-to-get theater tickets, but it may toss in current attractions you might otherwise miss. It also may cost, meals included, as little as $20 for three days; can be purchased with all transportation, home town to home town, prearranged; and is expandable to permit extra days on your own for, say, that shopping.

Quickie cruises

If you agree it's much, much better to cruise briefly than not to cruise at all, let these reassure you:

One day is enough for a side cruise from Miami to Cuba. On the Peninsular and Occidental Line's "S.S. Florida" you spend one night going, the next returning, with a full day in between for Havana.

Three days cover a Miami to Nassau quickie: the Dominican Republic Line's "S.S. Nuevo Dominicano" transports you.

Six days are ample for Nassau from New York, even include a full day and evening there. Weekly on the "S.S. Nassau" of the Ingres-Nassau Line.

Seven days are all it takes for one of the Furness Line's Triangle Cruises: from New York to Bermuda, Nassau, and back. On the "Queen of Bermuda," October 11, November 7, December 6; on the "Ocean Monarch," December 20. And for the Miami, Cuba, Vera Cruz, Mexico cruises added last spring by the Arnold Bernstein Line's "S.S. Silverstar."

Eleven days is the magic number for these: the Bull Line's newly done-over "S.S. Puerto Rico," from New York to Puerto Rico and the Dominican Republic, starting November 13; the "Nuevo Dominicano" again, from Miami to Nassau, the Dominican Republic and Haiti; "United Fruit," from New Orleans to Havana, Guatemala, and Honduras.

And even twelve days are enough for a holiday cruise to Hawaii—Matson Line's "S.S. Lurline," leaving San Francisco December 22, and you celebrate Christmas going, New Year's Day returning, with a full week in Hawaii between; and for the Grace Line's regular Santa cruises from New York to La Guaira, Puerto Cabello, and Cartagena, on the north coast of South America, via Curaçao.

DECORATOR'S DIARY

What goes on behind the decorating scenes—

from a typical decorator's notes on the new and better things now on the market

Sandy Harris was tremendously impressed with my first contribution toward cleaning up his room. "Cleaning up" was the term his mother invented to soft-pedal my role after he had put his foot down noisily against any interference by a dizzy decorator. Started out by advising him, in a tone I hope sounded properly conspiratorial, to junk his maple bedstead. The idea of junking anything that didn't belong to him personally seemed to have a big appeal. Promised to send a man to put legs and casters on the box spring and advised my belligerent client to clear a space for it along the wall. With that I left, assuring his mother I'd be back in a month or so. You have to work slowly with teenagers. I've discovered, and take time out to consolidate your gains.

That first step helped but it was only half successful. Seemed to be more space in the room without the bulky bedstead. But soon floor around the bed began to cluttered with a strange assortment of items including a radi sheaf of comic books, a collection of bicycle keys and a tube of acne salve Sandy elegantly re to as his "pimple putty." "V I have to put them somewhere was his irrefutable answer v his mother reproached him for benefit. I jumped in quickly the suggestion that we build a s or wall cabinet over the bed. Mrs. Harris wouldn't hear of They never knew when her band's job might take them to other corner of the world and had long ago resolved she would invest a cent in anything couldn't take with them.

That was a poser. But after week's searching for something suspected didn't exist. I actually found it. At Herbert House, very much like the storage h heavy book somewhere near the spot recommended by the good- vision experts. Makes it easy to spread out the Sunday newspaper for clipping. Gives you a place to play chess, play solitaire, organize the family sewing box in casual comfort. Lets you use the living room for living—not just sitting pretty. But to be of any use, a little table has to come close, strad- dle your knees, and tuck its feet under your chair—a feat that ob- viously cannot be accomplished by anything with four straight legs. Found a trio last week at Fabry that meets all these terms. Natural walnut with X-shaped supports at the sides and a floor-level stretcher at the back but not at the front. (Yes. They nest.) Tops have tiny galleries around three sides that are a help if you're playing with needles or buttons. They're not cheap (around $180 for the three), but, then, they're real furniture. There are times when it's a help not to have to whisk things away into that bulging cupboard.

It will soon be chilly enough to light the fire again. Then come the phone calls from all the people who made resolutions last April to buy some really good-looking fire- place accessories. And from the cocky ones who were sure they could get away without a fire screen —pesky things—until the silliest little pop sent that spark flying out to burn a hole in the rug. For them I have a new answer, a screen that stands squarely on its own sure base and doesn't have to be moved, once the fire is started, until you're (Continued on next page)

The top half of the front is conveniently hinged to drop forward when you want to add a log or give an encouraging poke to the ones that don't feel like burning. George Nelson designed it for the Howard Miller Company. Discovered it at Richards-Morgenthau. Saw it again at Euster Associates.

Came across a nice pair of cabinets in Modernage last week. Good solution for people who dine in the living room and like to keep silver and linen there in a storage piece that has no resemblance to a dining room buffet. The cases are perfectly plain, but they have tam doors (real not fake) which just enough three-dimensional relief to banish the boxy look. sit on a platform bench enough to straddle a vacuum cleaner with ease, and long enough to leave space at the end for a couple of magazines or a workbench. Bench top is made of spindles pierce the frame in front making a nice pattern. For the insides of cabinets you can have your choice of four molded trays or a molded shelf topped with Formica. The latter, in case you want to use it as a liquor cabinet. Wood is with a natural finish. Light streaks shining through it provide a pleasing accent. Milo Baughman designed these pieces, they tell me. They were made by Glenn of California.

Well do I remember, back when I was a student, how we used to dream of topping off our decorating masterpieces with Master Fortuny's fabulous prints. I remember the furniture—tall, dark, handsome and heavy as lead—was the essence of elegance in those days. Fortuny's Venetian fabrics, worn one over the other, were the essential accompaniments. The background in those mysteriously blended colors or reds that looked so much cient, faded velvet. The patterns on the Renaissance, printed in gold or silver. You would use them on a wall covering above a dado of dark oak paneling and who could ask for more luxury than that?

But young decorators just out of school are not overworked filling orders for old-world luxury. Spent more time answering calls for child-proof living rooms, servantless living rooms, grim practicality. Elegance was forgotten. Fortune forgotten. Just goes to show how long it is to pigeonhole. Dropped there a while ago, for old time's sake, and what a surprise! New terms as fresh as yesterday's. Small scale leaves and blossoms, primitive geometrics. You variation of the right-side coloring.

Decided on two of them to bring back the sparkle to Mrs. Taylor's fading dining room. Picked "Cilindro" for the chairs. It's a mass of gold and silver dashes that remind me of heavy spring rain. For the draperies: "Orfeo," a small scale leaf-and-stem pattern in coral and metallic gold on white.

Neatest trick of my career, I do believe, is Mrs. Staley's new floor. Took some tall talking to get her to accept anything as new-fangled as Dodge Vinyl-Cork, especially in that somber brownstone with all her Victorian furniture. Victorian is no quaint revival with her—she never got rid of her grandmother's. But there wasn't much you could do about that floor except to carpet it entirely, and that, for reasons I was never clear about, she wouldn't hear of. So I persuaded her to try the tiles. They're cork with a top surface of vinyl plastic. We used three colors—solid blue, solid gray, and white—and had the six-inch squares cut in half diagonally then arranged them in a pattern that seems to shade more gradually from dark to light than a plain checkerboard. And what a change in the room! The new floor brightened it up as if we had cut through a big new window. It made everything look more modern and still the tiles are as sympathetic to the old-fashioned marble fireplace as if they had been installed when the house was built. So crisply elegant and so easy to keep that way. Just wipe it up now and then with a damp mop.

There was a time when I used to think of the pin-up lamp as a makeshift arrangement for summer cottages. That was before I had struggled so many times with my perennial problem: how to light

Another contingent of the Kitchen Kibitzers are sportsmen who insist on cooking their own fish or game. They may not give a damn about cooking anything else, but they'll argue to the last ditch about the proper way to roast a duck, cook a trout, or make a venison stew. Every hunter has his own ideas, but actually there's never just one way to do anything and you can always learn something from the other fellow.

The care and treatment of game before it reaches the kitchen, however, are all-important. A bird in hand may be worth two in the bush, depending upon what you do with it. With the advent of the freezer, most game is frozen enjoyed after hunting season over, but there are certain steps to be taken to keep it in good condition until it reaches the freezer.

For one thing, freezing does age meat and you don't age or game after freezing. All should be aged before freezing cooking. How many times you gone to a hunter's home pheasant feed and the things so tough you couldn't get a in the gravy? He probably the birds, picked them, and froze or cooked them right a

Pheasant should be hung in plumage for at least a week in a cold box, from 36° to 40°, and longer if your box is good and cold and the birds are in good condition. Watch them for signs of trouble—bad odor. When you've got the proper age, pick them, then wrap them in good airtight locker paper or pliofilm and store in home freezer or plan to cook them immediately. Don't try to age picked game. You can, but when you pick your game first, the air gets into those tiny holes where the feathers were pulled out and this starts disintegration of the fatty tissues and loss of flavor.

THE care of game begins immediately after it is shot. I've been duck hunting since I was twelve years old and in all those years, I've never drawn a duck immediately after shooting it. I've waited as long as a week, depending on the weather and refrigeration at hand, and I've never had a duck go bad. But I've seen some fellows draw their ducks, hang them in a nice place where the flies could blow on them and bacteria grow in the cavity exposed to the air, and wonder why their birds go haywire.

In the early part of the hunting season, you might be hunting ducks, dove, quail, and pheasant in a pretty warm climate. Use the good old common sense God gave you. If you can't keep your game cold, then of course you'll have to draw it, but keep it in bags away from flies and take a chance on its keeping until you can get it chilled. But if the temperature is cold, hell's bells, you're safe.

I don't shoot big game and have never been enthusiastic about it, but you should dress the animal and try to get a couple of weeks' age on it. At the end of that time, be sure to trim all exposed or cut edges where bacteria growth has taken place. I'd advise making your cuts of venison suitable for individual consumption, or roast size; then wrap the pieces properly, label, and freeze them.

In regard to fish, clean and freeze your fish as quickly as possible. After it is thoroughly frozen, dip it in water that's just about at the freezing point and then re-freeze it. This will put a glaze on the fish and keep it from dehydrating.

I'd advise you to check your game occasionally, and if you find any signs of freeze burns you better start using it. I've had pheasants in the freezer for more than a year and they were excellent. Fat birds, I've found, such as ducks, do not keep as well as lean pheasants. The reason for that is that the fat breaks down and turns to become rancid. One thing you can cause rancidity is the method by which the bird is plucked. Under no circumstances should a bird ever be singed if you intend to keep it for any length of time. You'll find that the heat of singeing breaks down fatty tissues, causing them to go bad quickly.

The type of wrapping for game is important. I'd suggest you check with local outfits for the best material available.

Another important item in the care of any kind of food is to maintain fairly even temperature. It can lay a lot of our troubles to a sweet woman, but let's not put her all the blame. If you're going to keep meats and vegetables properly frozen, you can't go up and down the temperature from 10° to 25°, and have good frozen food. It's the old complaint—if the temperature is 10°, then the ice cream is hard to serve, so up goes the temperature so the ice cream will be okay, and of course your meat and other foods begin to thaw. If you give them a shot of cold pretty soon you have a merry mess. Saw of freezing and thawing to keep your box at an even temperature, and you'll have delicious tasting meat, fish, and fowl.

NOW that we've discussed the care and treatment of game, we can go on to the next step—cooking. I contend that the best way to cook a duck is to rub it thoroughly inside and out with a good soya sauce and bake in a 500° oven until done. For a sprig or mallard, rare is eight to twenty minutes; medium is twenty-five to twenty-eight minutes; and after that, who cares? If the ducks are frozen, you'll have more success if you put them in the freezer frozen hard. It will take longer, but you'll have a better bird.

The best of cooks go off to a tangent now and then and make a dinner. I've done it myself. I will I forget the time I had Dan London of the St. Francis Hotel in San Francisco, and his wife, and Mr. and Mrs. H. Fleishhacker to dinner. The de résistance was to be ducks.

had shot with my own little gun, and barbecued in my Chinese oven. I took the ducks from the freezer for the evening, thawed them and dipped them in soya sauce, and hung them in the barbecue pit. They should have been done in twenty-eight minutes. We gathered in the backyard lanai for cocktails, not to gabbing, and then went in for soup and salad when I suddenly remembered the ducks and tore down the back stairs to the pit. The blamed things were harried to a crisp.

As if that wasn't had enough, I had put back two ducks when the children said they didn't want any, forgetting that when I took the ducks out of the freezer in the first place I had already made allowance for their difference in size. What a charming dinner! If you ever saw a flustered Frenchman, that was me. Charred roast duck and not even enough to go around. Herbert Fleishhacker still gives me the bird when I say, "I'll cook you a dinner."

Sooner or later, you're going to have a mess of mud hens on your hands. In bluebird weather, when the ducks aren't flying, it's lousy with mud hens, so you pop at 'em and then don't know what in heaven's name to do with them. Some day get serious about them and really get a lot—twenty to twenty-five. When you get them home, skin them, cut out the breasts, and make a mud hen stew.

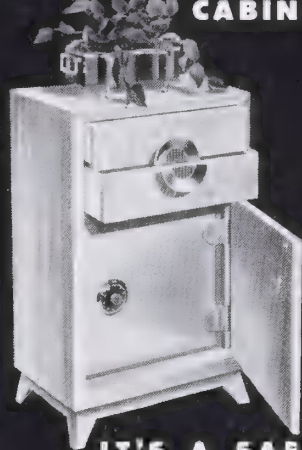

Mud Hen Stew

25 mud hens, skinned breasts only large onions, sliced bay leaves
whole allspice peppercorns stalks celery carrots
light red wine

Put the breasts in a crock and read the onions and spices over 'em evenly. Add a light red wine and let the breasts stand overnight; two days is even better. Remove the breasts and dredge 'em in flour. Brown in oil, then immerse in the wine, seasonings, and vegetables in which they were marinated, adding water as necessary. Add the carrots and celery, 'em up, and 1 pound of fresh mushrooms, 2 tablespoons of A-1 sauce, and let simmer until tender. Thicken the gravy, season to taste, and serve with rice or thick white meal mush (polenta). This makes an ideal duck club dinner.

One of the best duck shoots I've experienced was in Mexico, appreciated all the more because it was so unexpected. About two years ago I'd had my nose pretty much to the grindstone and needed a rest, so my wife and I decided to drive down into Mexico. We'd never been across the border and wanted to see the famed Tia Juana. A typical border town, gaudy and dirty, none of the hotel accommodations had any appeal to us, so we drove on the Ensenada where, I had heard, there was an excellent hotel. As luck would have it, the place was closed for repairs, so we settled down for the night at Rosarito, a very charming place at one time, but currently about to fall apart from neglect. The next evening we drove back to Tia Juana in search of food and unanimous recommendation was La Casita, which left us no choice, and we've never regretted it.

As we walked through the door, a nice-looking, cleanly dressed Mexican lad, José by name, seated us at a small booth and handed us menus. I asked José if he couldn't produce something extra special as we were travel-weary and tired of mediocre food. He suggested small teal ducks, quail, and a green salad. It sounded wonderful and it really was.

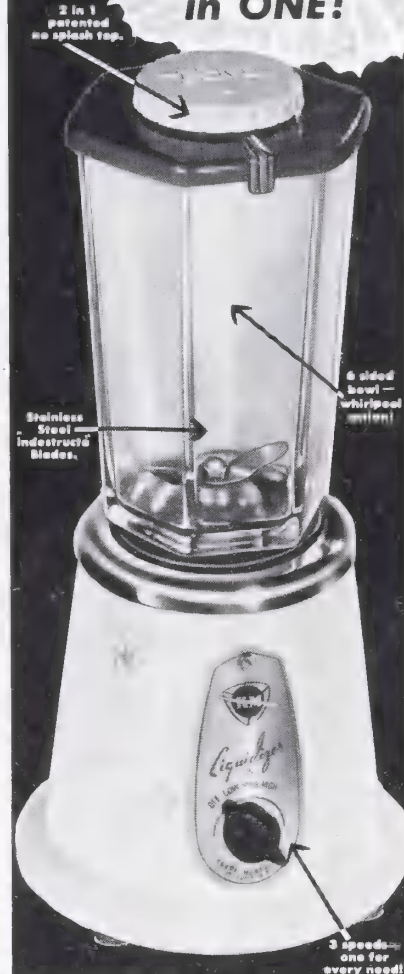

The ducks were roasted rare and the quail were different from any that I had ever tasted. They were well browned and then steamed with a small amount of broth to which carrots, celery, cumin seed and celentas seed, a little lemon and white wine had been added. The cumin seed and celentas seed, which are very strong in flavor, were used sparingly so as not to kill the delicate flavor of the birds.

José produced a bottle of white wine from the Bodega Santa Tomás of Baja California, and I have never enjoyed a wine more. The bouquet, clearness, and flavor were excellent. Before the evening was too old, José Hernandez and I were friends and he had invited me to shoot with him at Rodriques Dam the following day.

I arrived the next morning at seven at José's humble hacienda, which he and his brothers had built by themselves. They had even made the bricks for it—about twenty thousand as I recall. We drove up a little arroyo and about five miles out of Tia Juana we turned off the bumpy, dirt road and parked along a little creek, hardly a trickle. José pulled out his guns, two old 12-gauge pumps of ancient vintage, and we started along the creek bottom.

First to fall was a dove to José and I picked off two quail as they left a clump of willows. Soon after, José pointed to a clump of tule which I could see through the willow thicket, and he told me there was a small pond on the other side. We circled the tule and flushed both teal and mallard and the tally was two cock mallards for me and a teal and a hen mallard for José. What a terrific spot! José told me that just a few hours shooting in November and December would bring him from twenty to twenty-five birds.

We got back to the creek and went up the arroyo a little farther and repeated the same approach. I flushed a dove that went into a bunch of tules and threw a rock to flush him again, but when he flushed, he was off like a shot, and I missed completely.

Our next pond was an open one and we could see birds swimming about leisurely. On our approach they flushed, but we got only one shot, which went to José—a cinnamon teal. Back at the car, we spotted a lone teal in a small pond so José went in to see what he could do. I figured that the bird might work my way and sure enough, when he broke over he came my way, and it was a cinch shot. I was so sure, though, that I missed my first shot, and my damned old blunderbuss wouldn't eject, so the bird got away. I can't remember having more fun, or shooting in more beautiful surroundings.

That night, before returning to the States, we went back to La Casita for dinner and José made a wonderful salad:

La Casita Green Salad

For five people, take a very large bowl with plenty of room for tossing, and line it with plenty of fresh, shelled romaine. Leave a hole in the center in which to make the dressing. Crush about 25 kernels of garlic in a pint of salad oil. Let stand at least twenty-four hours ahead of time—forty-eight is better. This can be kept on hand. Drop 2 raw eggs into the bottom of the salad bowl, pour over them 1½ ounces of the prepared garlic oil, 3 ounces of regular salad oil, 1½ ounces Worcestershire sauce, the juice of 4 lemons, 6 heaping tablespoons of grated cheese, salt, and freshly ground pepper to taste. When dressing is thoroughly blended using a large wooden spoon, toss it with the salad greens and add a dozen or so anchovies and a liberal helping of crouton

Duck hunting in the States isn't done so casually as it is in Mexico. You just can't go out any time you feel like it and knock off a couple of birds. I always try to open the season at the Duckville Gun Club up in the Bear River marsh, just west of Brigham City in Utah. Their season opens two weeks before the California season, so this gives us two good openings. Duckville is quite a club. Early in the season the sprig (pintail, my Eastern friends) comes in plentifully. The whole area is a mud flat and club members get around in an airtight-powered, flat-bottom boat which takes them 35 miles per hour across those flats right smack dab before the blinds. Shooting is best around nine or ten in the morning, so you don't have to get up at the crack of dawn and shiver in the morning frost. The blinds are box doubles and you can usually let the birds work unless some hooplehead is in a bombarding mood, and then it's catch as catch can. This seldom happens, however, as the blinds are pretty far apart.

There's nothing like blowing your horn after a day in a duck blind and you can never quite get into your stride until you've had a couple of libations. Opening night is usually festive, and on one occasion, I was elected master of ceremonies. I had planned on making a punch but couldn't find a punch bowl so had to improvise. I got the biggest stock pot I could find from the kitchen, a 10-gallon job, and picked tules, cattails, marshmallow, and salt grass in the marsh, and tied these in front of the pot on a table. I put half a dozen mallard decoys in the grass and had the best-looking punch bowl you ever saw. It looked just like a miniature duck blind. I filled the pot with a good rum punch and named it "Duckville Punch" in honor of the occasion.

Duckville Punch

2½ bottles good light rum (Puerto Rican)
½ bottle golden Jamaica rum
½ gallon lemon juice
¾ gallon orange juice
½ bottle orgeat syrup
5 ounces brandy
2 handfuls bruised mint leaves
2 large bottles white wine

Mix well, pour over cake of ice in a punch bowl, and let chill about two hours to both cool and dilute.

Another good drink, especially if the club isn't too large, is a drink I've named Gun Club Punch.

ause it is served in a glass that s like a shotgun shell—green s with a gold base.

Gun Club Punch

of 1 lime
ounces unsweetened pineapple juice of grenadine of curacao one light Puerto Rican rum one Jamaica rum

p of shaved ice; pour into gun glass. Garnish with a g of mint if available.

them in butter very gently.
u want to use olive oil, I'd est a combination of butter olive oil, as the oil keeps utter from burning so quickly.

Place the pheasant in a Dutch oven or heavy pot with a lid and add 2 large shallots, finely chopped, and ½ pound of fresh mushrooms which have been sautéed first in butter. Over the mixture pour 2 ounces of bourbon whisky—and I do mean bourbon—and season with salt and pepper. Make a stock with the backs or use chicken broth.
Add enough of this broth from time to time so that the pheasant doesn't burn but will make a thick sauce.
Let the birds simmer gently for about an hour, or until tender. Add a teaspoon of MSG (monosodium glutamate) and about ten minutes before serving, whip ½ pint of sour cream and stir it into the pheasant until it heats through.
Serve the pheasant with wild rice and a green salad.

Pheasant Sauté

Make this the same way as Pheasant in Sour Cream (above), except that you substitute white wine for the bourbon. You can add the sour cream or not, as you wish.

Dr. Harry Kelly and his bride, Philenia, gave me this recipe for making the most of a good bag of pheasant.

Pheasant, Kelly Style

Pheasants are one of the finest but driest game birds. But a nice, fat pheasant cooked as follows is always tender and flavorful.
Cut off pheasant breasts, legs, and thighs. Pull tendons out of lower legs, if possible. Cook the backs, necks, seasoned with salt and pepper, in a pressure cooker (10 pounds pressure for 40 minutes with ¾ cup water, or cooked slowly in saucepan until meat comes off bones). When cooked, clean meat off bones and add to stock.

Flour pheasant pieces and brown in butter and oil. Season with salt and pepper and onion salt. Remove from skillet. Make a thin sauce from the drippings, using the meat and stock from the backs and necks. Add 1 cup of cream and season lightly. Pour this gravy or sauce over the browned pheasant, using either a casserole or a heavy iron kettle. Cook slowly (in a 325° oven or on top of stove at a simmer) for one and a half to two hours. When ready to serve, remove pheasant to a hot platter. Stir gravy to a smooth consistency. Add 1 tablespoon of sherry, if desired. Also add more stock and cream if a greater amount of sauce is desired. If the gravy curdles, it is usually due to having cooked it at too high a temperature. This can be corrected by stirring the gravy and heating it up quickly just before serving.

This recipe is easily varied by omitting the cream and adding the liquor and contents of a can of mushrooms and 1/2 cup of dry white wine.

If the cream gravy is used, it is especially good served with mashed potatoes. The second sauce or variation is excellent served with fluffy, white rice.

Wild Goose

Generally, when I kill a wild goose, I give it to my Chinese crew. They boil it for two or three days and make a tough soup. Frankly, wild geese don't interest me much, with the exception of an occasional young cackler. I'll admit a young honker is something good to eat. The only method of cooking that I can crow about is to cut the breasts out of the goose, split them, and dredge them with flour. Sauté in butter and then steam until tender, adding a little stock or broth and seasoning. For a tender, young goose, just fry the fileted breasts a few minutes and serve with currant jelly mixed with a small amount of chutney (Trader Vic's, of course) and a touch of grated orange rind.

Venison Steaks or Chops

Deer hunting is just too rugged for a guy with a peg leg, so I've never gone in for it, but that's never kept me from cooking venison. If someone gives you some steaks or chops, here's one good method of cooking them:

Cut away any over-aged meat. Season with salt and pepper. Dredge with flour and fry in a hot skillet in oil or shortening very quickly, only four or five minutes. Don't attempt big, thick chops because they take too long to cook. Quick cooking is for tender meat and venison is best when rare and juicy in the center.

Swissd Venison

Cut venison steaks into serving size and pound with flour just as you do beef for Swiss steak and brown well in oil in a Dutch oven. Sprinkle with liberal amounts of chopped parsley, onion, and green pepper and thinly sliced tomatoes. Add salt and pepper and wine. Cover and simmer from 1 1/2 hours, or until tender.

Venison Pot Roast

Marinate a roast-size piece of venison in red wine overnight with the following:

2 onions, thinly sliced
Peppercorns
2 cloves garlic, crushed

Next day, drain off the liquid and brown your pot roast in a heavy kettle or Dutch oven. Add

2 tablespoons A-1 sauce
6 dried mushrooms
2 carrots, chopped
1/2 cup chopped parsley

Add the wine, seasonings and onions in which the meat marinated and simmer three to four hours depending upon the size of the roast. This method can also be used for venison stew.

Dr. Griffin's Venison Stew

It took a lot of perseverance to get this recipe out of Dr. Griffin. Whenever I'd call on him he'd be in surgery, going out to town, or on a vacation. His secretary promised to get it from him but he had it in his head and couldn't find time to jot it down. I nailed him in my office one day and he sat down and dictated the recipe to my secretary. That was two years after I had first started on his trail for it.

The first thing about venison stew: The venison itself has a distinctive flavor which will come through many ingredients and will allow you to come out with something that has not only a good flavor but a texture that you will appreciate on your palate. Many people think that when you are making stew, you can use anything junk but, like any other dish you want something good. You should use ingredients of first quality. The stew that I have made always been from the hindquarters of the venison. The first thing I have done is to dig out the tendons and rough element of the meat so that every piece of meat which is put into the stew is edible. I usually cut the venison into 1½-inch cubes—nothing smaller.

Melt ¼ pound of butter in a 10-inch skillet. Brown 2 large onions, finely chopped up, with sprigs of parsley. Wrap some rosemary and a couple of cloves of garlic in a piece of cheesecloth so that the flavor can go into the stew but can be removed. (The garlic and rosemary add flavor to the stew but the pieces are disagreeable to many people.) Put on the stove and cook until the onion is browned. Fill the skillet with the venison; add another cup of butter, some salt, and cook for thirty minutes. This is then transferred to the vessel in which the stew will be made. Add 1 wine glass of white wine and cook for ten minutes. Add ½ wine glass of wine vinegar and one No. 2 can of solid pack tomatoes and cook for an additional twenty minutes. At this point the principal ingredients are done.

I take the other things that are going to be put in the stew which I don't want cooked too much. I use artichoke hearts—either canned or cooked separately—and mushrooms. Pour the juice of the artichoke hearts right into the stew and set the artichoke hearts aside. Do the same with the mushroom juice. Then pour into the stew the juice of a can or two of olives, keeping the olives aside until later. The olives should be large enough to be seen so someone doesn't break a tooth biting down, or use pitted olives. Let the stew simmer and cook along for about ten or fifteen minutes and then dump in the mushrooms, olives, and artichoke hearts, and at this time, if you wish, you can add sliced water chestnuts or nuts and let cook ten or fifteen minutes more. Cook until the flavor goes through completely but not to the point where the ingredients disintegrate. With the juices from these ingredients, there should be sufficient liquid. Serve with French bread. We prefer sour French bread, put in the oven and toasted.

When the basic ingredients are cooked, if you think the gravy is going to be too thin, throw in another can of artichoke hearts and let them cook until disintegrated. Maxine Smith De Fernandez, my Mexican correspondent, sent me the next recipes, which I include just in case someone gets lost and has nothing better to eat than beaver or lizard. My sincere sympathies. Next time, take your compass along, and your fur mittens.

Tail of Beaver

(Not to be confused with Beard of the Prophet.)

Beaver tail is a great delicacy when prepared according to old Mexican custom. Draw the skin from the animal and pare the hide off carefully, being certain to remove the kernels found in the small of the back and under each foreleg between ribs and shoulder. (Don't ask me why—I don't know what they are.) "Cooling-out" by hanging in the open air several frosty nights will greatly improve the meat.

Remove the tail, impale it on a sharpened stick, and roast it for several minutes over a bed of coals. When the rough skin begins to blister, take it from the fire and when cool enough to handle, peel off the skin.

This done, you will have a piece of gelatinous meat which is quite pleasant in flavor after it has been thoroughly roasted over the coal or boiled until tender in rapidly boiling salted water. (Note: Be sure your beaver is a youngster because old beaver meat tastes like the inside of a Russian motorman's glove!)

Iguana (Giant Lizard)

The flesh of the giant lizard known as the iguana is white and not unlike pork or chicken breast. To clean and draw the animal, cut the meat from the skin and skin out the legs as you would a terrapin. (Is that so!) Or you may draw the animal and skin the leg and cut off the head and tail and roast the meat in the skin after washing it thoroughly in several cold waters. Soak overnight in slightly salted cold water.

Braised Iguana with Vegetables

Use the required amount of iguana meat, which has been prepared according to the foregoing suggestions, and, placing in rapidly boiling salted water, parboil for thirty minutes. Remove from water, drain, wipe dry, roll in flour and fry brown in hot oil or pork lard. When browned, take from the pan and set aside in a warm place until ready to use. Next, drain all but about 2 tablespoons of fat. (Continued on page 320) oil in which the meat was cooked; place the pan back on the heat over a slow fire and add the following ingredients:

- 1 or 2 onions, sliced
- 2 carrots, diced
- 2 potatoes, cubed
- 3 tomatoes, quartered (or 1 small can)
- 3 crushed peppercorns
- 1 bay leaf

Cook these for five minutes, stirring with a spoon or spatula to prevent sticking. Do not let the onions brown! When the vegetables have cooked five or six minutes, season lightly with salt and lay the meat on top of them. Pour over all enough boiling water to almost cover, put on the lid, and simmer gently until the meat is tender. Add more boiling water if liquid cooks down too much.

How to Store Wine

The term "wine cellar" brings up the image of vast subterranean recesses full of big casks and long rows of wine bottles lying in horizontal position. Today, as the size of our houses shrinks, the term has a less expansive, less romantic connotation. We have neither enough wine nor enough space for anything so grandiose.

Ready-made, metal racks come in various sizes, fit neatly on shelves.

The term nowadays means a compact place to store your wines conveniently and safely. There is no fixed form or pattern for the home wine cellar. It may be honey-comb bins or a cabinet, wood or wire racks or some combination of these. Its shape derives in a general way from the requirement that wine in bottles be stored horizontally. If you are handy with hammer and saw, you can build his new kind of table-setting claims a healthy and growing fiction that the objects we handle oftenest should be the most beautiful of our possessions. Since set the table three times a day, is a natural place to give free to individual taste and the kinds and types of objects, in endless materials, colors, shapes, sizes, and purposes. Their design can be influenced by so many sources—historical, geographical, and national. Why should any meal be dulled by a monotonous setting when all these things exist to be mixed and matched, assembled and reassembled with originality and the pleasure that comes of exercising one's imagination?

Once you make table-setting an expression of your own original taste, you'll be alert to the variety of form and mix-match potentials in new china shapes, like Hallmark's sculptural "Tomorrow's Classic," designed by Eva Zeisel, from Midhurst.

This is worth your serious thought, particularly if table-setting to you has become a mechanical three-a-day chore, so routine that you scarcely notice the same old tableware you are using meal in and meal out. For this new approach can turn a chore into a satisfying form of self-expression, an enjoyment as real to you as the pleasure any artist experiences in choosing his colors and composing a picture. It is one way to make a creative art of daily living.

If you are cynical about this—and perhaps you are if you have been schooled too long in the antediluvian tradition that any act of housekeeping must be synonymous with drudgery—we ask you to try it for yourself. A fresh, original table takes no more time and physical effort than a humdrum one, and it is no more costly. Without realizing it now, you may already own the makings of a dozen new ideas—heirlooms stowed away under wraps, odds and ends of rarely-used china or glass, a length of fabric, even pottery, glass and metal from your kitchen shelves. The only requisite is your willingness to try something different.

And you will not be alone in this

The buying habits of millions of American women are proof of this new creative approach to table-setting. They are no longer satisfied to buy one complete set of china in one pattern and use it to the end of their days. Instead, they are buying a great variety of dishes, a limited quantity in various patterns which can combine with each other in a still greater variety of ways. This lets them change the china pattern with each course.

It's significant that new forms and textures are showing up in tableware, for they would not be on the market if buyers were not asking for them. Sleek new china shapes are appearing, clearly influenced by modern sculpture.

Ever notice how difficult it is sometimes to breathe in enough oxygen to "fuel up" your blood stream? Furnaces, too, have had this problem.

This will help you understand why there is a difference in automatic gas heating equipment. Bryant has done something about it. Operating much like a lung, the Bryant Diaphragm Valve and companion gas pressure regulator automatically regulate the flow of gas to the furnace burner. They automatically adjust for variations in gas pressure. And they do this year after year, requiring little or no attention.

Careful attention to such details as this, both in engineering and production, has made Bryant the most efficient, economical and carefree heating equipment you can buy. More than a million householders will testify to that fact. Why not talk to some Bryant owners before you make what should be a lifetime purchase of comfort, convenience and better living?

Choose from the twenty-five models in Bryant's complete line of automatic heating equipment. The Model 87 automatic gas winter air conditioner, above, filters, heats, humidifies and circulates the air in your home . . . all automatically. that fourth side of the room where you don't want to put a floor lamp or a table lamp or even a table, and where any kind of a permanent fixture looks too important. Now I know better. An inconspicuous pin-up that will give light without calling too much attention to itself can be a lifesaver. But there aren't too many to choose from. Hence my glee over Lightolier's latest contribution: a pin-up designed by Isamu Noguchi. Its shape is supposed to resemble a Japanese kite although it reminds me more of a spinnaker billowing in the wind. Consists of a triangular shade or shield of textured white plastic with three metal legs attached to the corners. The legs pin to the wall and the light bulb nestles inside the shield and well away from the wall so that the wall itself acts as a reflector. Would do a nice lighting job where you want general diffused illumination, not concentrated on any particular spot.

One way to get a new perspective: Go up in a plane and while you're gaining altitude watch all the big, bad landmarks of a bothered world shrink into dainty motifs for a pretty scenic wallpaper. Another way: Take a walk in the meadow on a warm, dry day. When you come to a comfortable slope, lie down in the tall grass and look around you. Suddenly, the thing that looms largest on your horizon is the wild aster eighteen inches from your nose. You've seen it in passing every day for a week. But how different it looks close up. How it dwarfs—for the moment—everything else in your life, including all your problems! Personally, I find that kind of reverse perspective very relaxing.

Watch out for the little things

A case history proves that a little common sense during construction saves a lot of headaches later

By Lou Weston

half a year of building, we have lived in our house for two years. It's perfect—almost. The decoration could not suit our taste. The room sizes are better. The interior decoration (there is of it so far) is, we think, in good taste. Everything works well enough, the doors don't stick too much, the roof doesn't leak, the basement is as dry as a runner's throat at quittin' time.
We should be, you say, happy as long. And so we are, except sometimes, there are certain things that bother us, trivial things that should have been watched out for.
We didn't. You may think we're being picky, until you build for yourself, and find, after you're in the place, that sometimes those little things mean a lot.

We have the door locks, for instance.
We have a fine Yale lock on the front door, and a sturdy lock of the same type on the garage door.
The back door lock is one of the old-fashioned kind that any burglar with a skeleton key can open. Of course, we have forfeited security this way. How much similarity would be to have all three locks the same and use one key for all?

We have the switch for the kitchen light in the back door, convenient when entering the house from the back door. Most houses looked at before we built had the switch in the same place. But when we came into the kitchen much later from the dining room. A switch at both places would solve the problem beautifully. Now, after the house is finished, it's more costly to install the extra

one. We may put in the extra switch next year. On the other hand, it may not be in 20 years from now. Put yours in when you build.

Speaking of electricity, we were caused considerable grief by the strange propensity of workmen to cover up wall outlets. The tile man, working just in the kitchen and bath, managed to cover up two—no mean feat in that small area. Of course, these were easily recovered
—after the mistake was noticed.
All we had to do was bash in the tile wall "about where" we thought the outlet boxes were. We didn't have to replace more than four or five pieces of tile altogether.

The plasterer, swinging his trowel and straight-edge with joyful abandon, covered up three more outlets. And here is the rather exasperating thing about that—the electrician didn't even notice they were missing. He had wired us up thoroughly. The city had inspected and pronounced it good. Yet three outlets were hidden behind the plaster, with the bare wires coiled inside the boxes to start who knows how many fires in later years.

After we had discovered one missing by trying to plug in a bed-lamp, we became suspicious and checked the whole house, using the itemized bid from the electrician to determine how many wall outlets there were supposed to be in the house. It had never occurred to the electrician to use this simple check when he had finished the wiring. "You'd be surprised," he said chattily, later, as he chopped away at the plaster with his hatch-

How to make light work of storm windows and screens

New frameless, lightweight screens and plastic storm sash, installed from the inside on the same fixtures, take the struggle out of putting up and taking down screens, storm windows

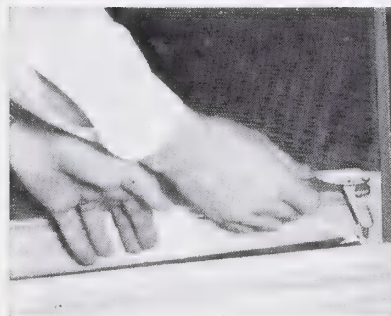

This is the works for summer and winter protection for one window—a roll of flexible aluminum screen, a roll of clear, transparent plastic storm sash, seven screws, two tension locks. Both screen and storm sash fit interchangeably on the same fixtures. Both roll up to store in a small box.

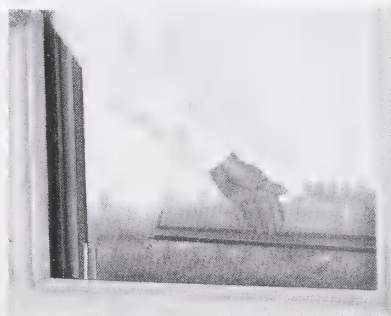

Drive seven screws—and the fixtures are installed. Top right: put one screw at each side and one in the center of top blind stop. These will hold top bar of screen. Bottom right: tension locks require two screws each. Locks are installed on blind stops at each side of sill, hold bottom of screen.

Installation's a cinch. Upper right: You slide the top bar of screen (or storm sash) over the three screws at window top. Lower right: You fit the bottom bar of screen into the tension locks at both sides of window. When tension locks are pushed down, screen becomes taut, fitting snugly against window sides.

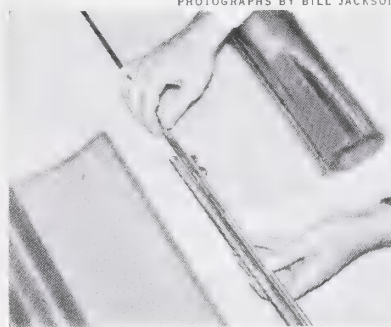

You can wash the window while screen or storm sash is up. Simply release tension locks and the screen hangs free and flexible because it has no rigid side frames. Both screen and storm sash weather well, will not rust and cause unsightly stains on paint.

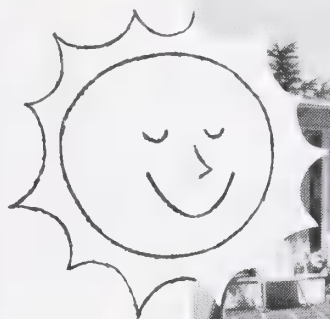

PHOTOGRAPHS BY BILL JACKSON

It's an easy switch from screens to winter windows and vice versa, and it's all done from the inside. You simply unhitch the screen from the window, slip it out of its top and bottom bars, replace it with supple, unbreakable storm sash, and re-hang on the same fixtures.

From the outside, the screen (left) and storm sash (right). Old sagging windows may need bottom weather-stripping. In humid weather plastic storm sash may look wavy, but view is clear. "Columbia-matic" screen and sash for one window costs about $12, about $6 each.

et, searching for the hidden boxes. "how often this happens!"

Here are some other things you may have trouble with. Maybe you'll be smarter than we were and watch out for them all and more. Above all, maybe you'll raise your voice to the contractor if you think something isn't right:

Fuse Box. Installed in the garage. This made it easy for the electrician. But we are the ones living here. The garage is attached to the house, but the only way to get into the garage is to go around outside. So if a storm blows a fuse, we must rush outside in the rain, open the garage door, and stand wet-footed and blinking, fiddling with kingdom come.

Garage Door. This is overhead style, quite acceptable. But we bought it with that little row of glass windows near the top. Not only did this hurt the looks of the front of our house, the windows showed anyone interested—thieves especially—if the car was in. They also get dirty and are infrequently washed. We replaced these rather fast with wood, so now the door is solidly wood-paneled.

Clothes Chute. If you have a basement laundry, fit in a clothes chute in a closet above the laundry, preferably a bathroom closet. It will save many steps and leave the basement stairs free of clothes baskets.

Shower. According to our amazed and open-mouthed plumber, everybody wants a shower, so maybe this can't affect you. We couldn't afford a separate little tiled shower room, didn't like the metal cubicles, and believe the shower-in-tub combinations conducive to dangerous falls and sloppy floors. After much argument, the plumber sullenly agreed to give us a showerless tub. But after the piping was roughed in, there, defiantly, stood the shower outlet.

We protested to the contractor. He took it out. Suddenly, after a week or so, there it was back in again. We cried out again, but before anything was done about it, the place was lathed and plastered, and there was the shower outlet, sneering at us. When we want to get rid of the house, we keep telling ourselves, the shower will be a good selling point.

Heating Outlets. Modern nances are so well insulated the no heat escaping in the basement so you need heating outlets! Our heating contractor figured two outlets as a matter of course. Some heating men, as friends of ours have found out, put no lets in the basements unless are asked for, and, without the basements are scarcely liv in cold weather.

Floor Coverings. Try darnedest to delay putting asphalt tile, linoleum, rubber, or similar coverings until workmen are almost entirely ished with other work in the house. This way, you may avoid permanent mars and scratches that spoil your floors from the very beginning.

There are a few more small ters that pain us, like the fact our door from the kitchen to basement is hinged at the wrong side, so when we open it t down into the basement, the swings in front of the basement light switch. A small sliding in the center of the big door figure, will fix that. And the to the bathroom closet is h at the side toward the m lights. Thus, when the closet is opened, it effectively cut all light from the closet. And heating outlet in the kitchen, the wall directly opposite the tilating fan, so that the fan out all the heat in the kitchen, especially in winter.

We are happy with our h But it could have been imple in little ways, with more primary care and more vigorous print-following as it was being. Before you start, try to vize your family actually living your house, room by room and by day. Put down on paper point you want to be sure o matter how petty it seems a moment. Your architect, contractor, and all the workmen will probably be completely honest. But can't read your mind, and ch are they are not engineering iuses. Don't be tongue-tied, don't stand awkwardly di your toes in the sand while let these men you think of as cialists go ahead entirely on own. Speak up! Often your mon sense is superior to t And don't expect your contractor to remember all the details work them out for you, no r how much you're paying him just won't. You'd better do it self, while you have a chance.

Just suppose everybody had the same face . . .

Imagine how difficult life would be if you couldn't tell friend from stranger by just a glance at a face! And imagine how difficult your shopping would be if you couldn't identify the goods you buy by the makers' brand names on them!

What faces do for you on people you meet, these brand names do for you on products you buy.

Because of brand name advertisements in these pages, you can do a lot of "shopping" sitting right where you are now. You read about new things, changes in familiar ones. You accept or reject, without stepping out of the house. Brand name advertising keeps you informed, and saves you time.

Because of brand names on the goods in the store, you quickly find just what you want, and know just what you're going to get. Brand names safeguard your money by assuring constant quality and value in the things you buy.

Because makers of brand name goods know they must compete against others for your favor, they strive to strive always for new ideas and better quality. Brand names assure you progress in continuous development of goods for better living.

Remember — as you look through the ads in this magazine — nowhere in the world do people get the protections you get when you choose among American manufacturers' and named goods!

How to stage your next daffodil show

Stretch your bulb budget by these tricks, and get glorious bloom from the bulbs you plant now

PHOTOGRAPHS BY GOTTSCHO-SCHLEISNER

Group 50 daffodil bulbs (planted 8" apart) in a planting that juts into your gravel or crushed bluestone path. It's more eye-stopping than 10 times as many bulbs scattered thinly through a flower border.

This is what you can have from just a dozen daffodils—if you plant them in a clump instead of stringing them out in the usual single line. Plant 4"-8" deep—no need to dig and replant for 10 years.

Big drifts like this (200 bulbs) are always dramatic. Daffodils thrive under trees, where grass grows poorly. But don't neglect feeding them. Designed by Powers Taylor; planted by Rosedale Nurseries.

THOMAS CHURCH, LANDSCAPE ARCHITECT

Two secrets here: interesting fence as a background for better display and more uniform flowering (protects flowers from wind), and compact grouping for an impressive show of King Alfred daffodils.

Book for Gardeners

By Carol H. Woodward

National Parks: What They Mean to You and Me, by Freeman Tilden. Alfred A. Knopf, New York, 1951. 417 pages.

penetrating the forested flanks of the Great Smokies with Freeman Tilden, you become friendly with the region's bardish mountaineers. When you climb the slopes of Mount Rainier through the pages of his book, you see the Elysium of wildflowers at every elevation. In the Grand Canyon where every inch . . . is pulsating with the eternal, ever-changing infinity of life becomes a reality. You shudder with the author at the thought "that there are still people who wish to build a dam which would flow the Colorado back into the Grand Canyon and submerge the heart of what the world goes there to see."

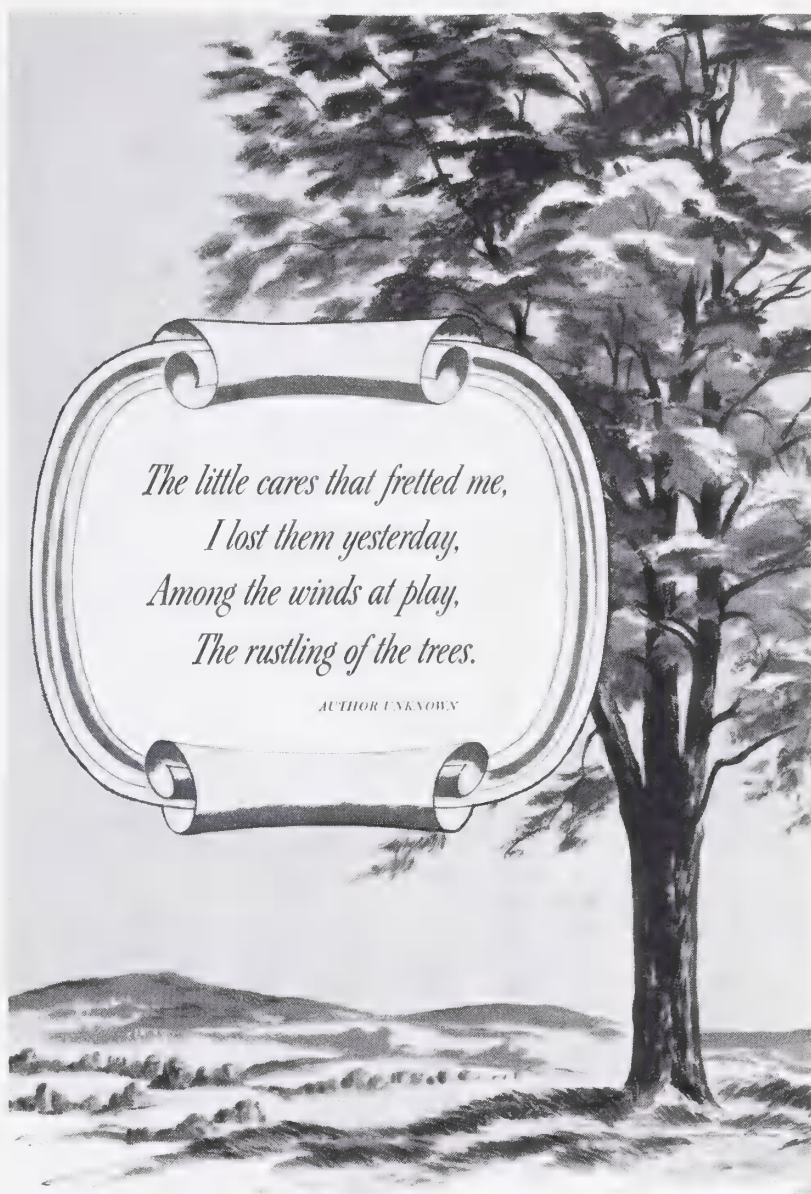

Thus does Mr. Tilden, a writer who has been consultant to the National Park Service since 1940, interpret our National Parks and Monuments. He presents them not as areas for physical recreation but more as havens for the recreation of the spirit.

His style has imagery, lyric quality and humor. He speaks of the "ferocity of swift-flowing rivers armed with abrasives" in Dinosaur National Monument. He claims to paraphrase Voltaire with the statement: "If Zion Canyon, Bryce Canyon, and Cedar Breaks did not exist, Kodachrome would have to invent them."

Writing of the "hobbies" acquired by a "retired glacier" (Mount Rainier), he says: "One of them was flower-arrangement. . . . It would be rash indeed to proclaim the flowers of Rainier foremost in an assembly of National Parks . . . But at least it can be said that the display . . . is superb, soul-satisfying, memorable . . . Let us be erringly romantic and insist that plants love Mount Rainier and the country around it."

In the useful information for tourists tabulated at the end, explicit directions are given for reaching each of the 53 National Parks and Monuments which are in the 23,000,000 acres of reserves in the National Park System. Rainbow Bridge in Southern Utah, which can be viewed only after 14 miles in the saddle, is no less inviting than Yellowstone, whose five entrances are accessible by car, train, bus, and plane.

New way is to plant the property lines

NEW

As we make more use of the grounds around our houses, the more we need privacy from the street and neighborhood. So the plants that used to be put around the foundations have moved away from the house to the outer perimeter of the lot, thus clearing the ground close to the house for terraces, service.

New planting way makes rooms seem larger

As houses grow more open and glassy, plants become more important. We want to see our plants from within the house. If shrubs are bunched against the house, you can't see them. If they are planted out at the property line, you can enjoy them. And your rooms seem to extend to the sidelines. Low hedge across front ties house to ground, visually.

simpler lines are being used in the garden, and fewer and simpler materials. All is calculated to give complete restfulness to the eye. If the eye sees too many things, it is confused and the sense of peace is obliterated.

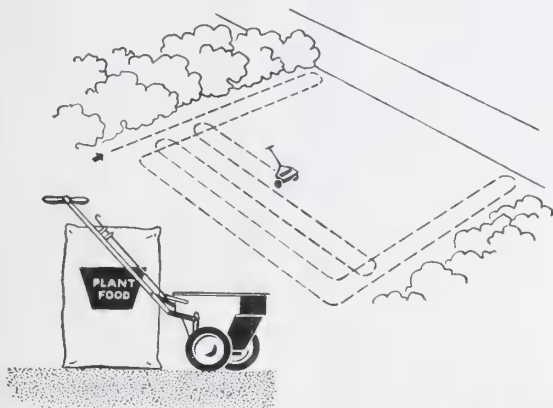

Simplification of lines does not mean eliminating outdoor structure. The closer house and garden are in use and appearance, the more they begin to interlock visually. More and more the lines and materials of the house are carried outdoors and into the landscape. And more and more the materials of the garden structure penetrate into the house, recalling the outside design and subtly merging indoors and outdoors. The paving of terrace is penetrating into house, making the floors more utilitarian in such heavy-duty spots as hallways, stairways, heavy traffic spots.

Since the garden is being designed more and more to be seen from everywhere within the house, the plan of it cannot be rigidly set, with a beginning and an end. The lines of the modern garden need to be moving and flowing, that it is pleasing when seen from anywhere, inside or

The eye can be easily fooled.

Insist upon large, firm soil balls, adequately roped, when buying ever-

BEST TIME to condition your soil

Fall is the ideal season to condition your soil with Krilium®—moisture, rain and weather are generally more favorable—ground is more workable
... Fall is also the season for setting out bulbs, for transplanting, for repairing bare spots in lawns.

Indoor growing, too, gets a renewed start—here Krilium finds year-round use, particularly with the introduction of the new 1-lb. handy shaker-top package—especially convenient for potted plants, flowers, window boxes.

Apply Krilium soil conditioner now.
Your soil will be ready for easy working whenever you're ready for later planting—next week or next spring.

3 to 6 inches for root crops such as carrots, beets, turnips; ½ inch or more for grasses, lawns.

4... Dry treatment is more effective because proper application depth can be accurately controlled.

5... On the basis of square feet of effective treatment (the only sound way to figure cost) Krilium is the most economical soil conditioner available.

Two Sizes

Quick facts about soil conditioning

1... Mere surface application of any soil conditioner will not break up hard, caked or crusted soil. It will not create good soil structure—soil still has to be broken up mechanically and by hand, before a conditioner can be effectively applied.

2... Krilium can be worked into the soil at the same time it is being broken up—only one double-effect operation is needed.

3... For best results, a soil conditioner should be worked in to root depth—

SPECIAL NOTE... Krilium is also available in full-strength economical Loamaker® formula, especially recommended for large-area applications. Ask your dealer.

Things can be made to seem longer or wider than they really are. This is a great aid, for we can make a small lot seem bigger, and so create spaciousness, without increasing garden maintenance and the real estate taxes. Thus a moving, changing line, that creates an asymmetric plan, not only pleases the eye but creates a new dimension for the house.

WHEN you read a list of the requirements that people expect the garden of today to satisfy, you think the result could only be a three-ring circus. They expect their garden to be a complete universe in itself.

Here is a check list of the many things that have to be provided for if you want to get the maximum use from every square foot of your property:

1. When the attic and basement disappeared, the garage became the great all-American storeroom. As a result, the family car is being forced into the driveway. We must either stop being collectors, or build additional storage room in the garden. Storage structures can be added to the garage or hidden behind garden fences. Storage walls built as long screens to give privacy to the terrace or separate the service areas, can provide for firewood, garden tools, cushions, and winter storage of garden furniture.

2. The baby is no longer dressed in white and taken around the block in his perambulator for an airing. He is tossed, almost naked, into the sunniest spot in the back yard where there must be enough space for a play pen and sand box. It should be visible from both living room and kitchen.

3. Parlor games are now played in the open; terrace space for outside living and entertaining must be provided. It should be able to accommodate four for bridge or forty after the "Big Game." It should be large enough so guests don't back into the flower beds, but small enough so that it doesn't resemble a parking lot.

4. Food and drink have come out into the garden. The terrace must have easy access to the pantry for serving. The portable barbecue and portable bar help this situation

If there's too much traffic for this portable equipment, a supplementary structure can be built. There is no limit to the amenities this arrangement can offer. You can make it simply, with just a roof for shelter and a hot plate to warm the coffee. Or you can step up the tempo with a fireplace, a small kitchen, and plugs for the toaster and radio.

5. Areas for various sports are demanded by many growing children. requests include badminton, deck tennis, croquet, horseshoes, shuffleboard, and many others. Swimming pools are now designed to fit into small gardens. Sometimes the driveway can double for badminton and the lawn for croquet.

6. Space must be left for a serving yard for clothes drying, garbage cans, and for various miscellaneous items, such as the broken tricycle and the half-dead Christmas azalea which can be dropped out of sight until you can figure out what to do with them.

7. There is still a certain amount of gardening to be done, in even the most streamlined garden. So unless you're happy raising your flat-pansies on the main terrace, you will need a garden service area. At the least, this requires a tool closet, potting bench, incinerator and mulch pile. If you like gardening, it might be enlarged to include lath house and greenhouse, soil bins, and flower sink.

8. Most people like the idea of returning to "the good life" enough to want to grow a few vegetables and a few fruit trees.

If you add the many individual needs, the hobbies which call for special workshops, you have a cross-section of the demands of the average family upon their property. Further, they would like to be simple to install and easy to maintain. They are convinced that the space around the house can be used to solve their problem. It is not just to be "landscaped" in the accepted sense of the term but made to produce living space, play space, and work space.

The job of the professional designer is to translate these requirements into a logical and intelligent plan which will produce the maximum in terms of use and beauty. To succeed, his plan must show simplicity of layout, integrity of the use of plant and structural materials, and a sure sense of proportion and pleasing form.

BOOKS on MUSIC

"How to Use Music in Your Life"*

By Richard Williams

"Imagine all that is most filthy and untidy: puddles on the floor, a rather old grand piano covered in dust and laden with piles of music, in manuscript or engraved. Beneath it (I do not exaggerate) an unemptied chamber pot. The little walnut table next to it was evidently accustomed to having the contents of the inkwell spilled over it. A mass of pens incrusting with ink—and more musical scores. The chairs, most of them straw chairs, were covered with plates full of the remains of the previous evening's meal and with clothes, etc." Balzac or Dickens would spin out this description over two whole pages and would need as much space again to describe the famous composer's appearance and costume to you. But as I am neither Balzac nor Dickens, I limit myself to saying this: I was at Beethoven's."

Beethoven's visitor was a certain Baron De Trémont, and you will find his account in the recently published book, Beethoven—Letters, Journals and Conversations, edited by Michael Hamburger (Pantheon). Mr. Hamburger conceived the idea of presenting Beethoven the man by allowing him to speak for himself through his letters and conversation books, and by quoting what his contemporaries had to say about him. This idea makes for a fascinating book which would have been even more fascinating had we been given a little more information about these contemporary witnesses and their relationship to Beethoven. Who was De Trémont? How trustworthy was he as an observer?

At any rate, absorbing as it is, the Baron's account will not enable you to understand Beethoven's music better. The composer's character and his conduct have no bearing on the music, at least none that you can hear. To learn that Beethoven was inordinately proud and conscious of his own importance ("All I can tell you is that you will only see me again as a truly great man," he writes at the age of thirty); that he was capable of gentle tenderness and love; that at the same time he could be somewhat of a moral prissy; that he loved to walk; that he was awkward and cut himself when he shaved; that he was naturally of a cheerful disposition, "had not the daemon pitched his camp in my ears"; that he was alternately stingy and generous; that he was not entirely scrupulous in money matters; and that he was unable to keep servants or run a reasonable household—to learn all that will not help you to enjoy his symphonies more. Reading about music is unprofitable as an aid to listening. A "pony" in music does not exist. There is no substitute for the musical experience itself. Biographical, historical, or technical facts do not matter.

However, once you have begun to enjoy music you will want to know more about the subject. You will

UNUSUAL, USEFUL DECORATIVE ARTICLES FOR ONLY $2.00 EACH

A FREE GIFT FROM ABROAD TO NEW MEMBERS

READ the fascinating story of the Around-the-World Shoppers Club. Then, if you decide to join you will receive a delightful FREE GIFT from a foreign country to welcome you to membership! We cannot describe this gift now, because in our contacts with world markets we frequently uncover small lots of interesting items—a few of one kind, a few of another, and so on. Your gift will be selected from one of these fortunate purchases, the most attractive articles going in the order of "first come, first served." Now read the story of the club—and mail the coupon while the best of our free gifts are available.

How this thrilling new shopping adventure brings you surprise packages from abroad every month! A wonderful gift idea!

Imagine yourself shopping in the tiny villages and the big cities of Europe, Asia, Africa, South America, the Near East and the Far East. Imagine yourself examining the hundreds of unusual articles peculiar to each foreign land, many of them hand made, then selecting the very choicest in interest, usefulness, beauty and value, and buying them for only $2.00 each!

Yes, you can now enjoy the thrill of receiving a surprise package every month, from France, Italy, Spain, Holland, Sweden, England, India, Japan or some other distant shore—for only $2.00, delivered to your door. You pay no postage, no duty. The value is guaranteed to be more than satisfactory to you in every instance.

How, you ask, can this be done? The secret is in the new, unique service offered by the Around-the-World Shoppers Club—plus the magic of the American dollar. Foreign nations are in urgent need of American dollars to support native industries. They are glad to offer tremendous merchandise values in exchange. Thus you get more for your money—and at the same time you are doing your bit to improve world conditions by lending a helping hand to our neighbors around the world.

Conversation Pieces From Abroad

Our representatives abroad are constantly searching for the best items and the biggest bargains available. They not only attend the great international fairs and exhibitions, but they travel the highways and byways of foreign lands to discover the unique, the unusual, the beautiful articles which are destined to become conversation pieces when worn, displayed or used in America.

Coming from a different country each month, the Club's selections are ever-varied in character, representative of many different cultures. One month, for instance, you may receive an example of fine Florentine leather-work from the historic city of the Italian Renaissance; the next, a package may arrive from mysterious India, containing a strangely beautiful work of hand-wrought silver in symbolic design. Other shipments may bring you an old-world woodcarving from Switzerland; a handwoven creation from South America; a sparkling piece of Swedish glassware; a chic product of France.

A Thrilling Surprise Each Month

With each package will come the fascinating story of the origin and significance of the article you receive—adding glamour to each shipment.

Think of the fun of receiving such exotic "surprise packages" month by month! It is like shopping around the world! That is the thrill of membership in the Around-the-World Shoppers Club. Each month you'll look forward to the arrival of your foreign shipment with eager anticipation. Each month you'll experience the crowning thrill of the treasure-hunter when you open it to see what delightful surprise it has brought. You'll admire the unusual foreign craftsmanship; and you'll marvel at the incredible bargain.

You Pay Nothing Extra for Membership

It costs nothing to join the Around-the-World Shoppers Club. There are no membership fees or dues. You pay only for the regular monthly selections of merchandise—and only the low, uniform price of $2.00 apiece—even less on a 6 months' or 12 months membership.

ARCUS TOY CHEST. What could a Mother do without a toy chest? Our private opinion is that she'd either break her own back over a roller skate, or break a child's neck for the tornado-tick shambles of his room. So it's a life saver and a wallop-bargain. Colorful cardboard chest, reinforced with wood frame. Holds adult's weight. 31" x 15" x 12", $3.75 ppd. Foster House, 100 Cole Court, Princeville, Ill.

MINI-SIZED! And that's a triumph of understatement. This is the kind of ash tray that grown men get silly about. SWEDISH MADE "ANGEL CHIMES"

Revolving "Angel Chimes"

From Sweden comes this enchanting decorative innovation. Heat rising from the burning candles causes the Herald Angels to revolve lightly striking the bells with their wands. The resulting chime-like sound is charming as church bells afar. This is the original, one and only "Angel Chimes." It differs from other candelabra of its type in that (1) it is made of heavy gauge, highly polished brass instead of copper. (2) It has a tray base to catch possible drippings. (3) It has holders for four candles instead of the usual three. (4) It is imported from Sweden where it is precision made. 13" high. 4 candles included free with each. Buy two—one for each end of the mantel, dining table, etc. Or if you desire only one for yourself the extra will serve as a perfect gift. $2.75 ea. $ for $5.00 postpaid.

Imported Candles to fit "Angel Chimes" 12 to a box, red or white 1 box 50¢. 2 boxes $1.45 postpaid.

The YUCA Emerald rings, although of higher price, still cost you far less than the natural gem. The natural emerald often sells for $1000 per carat.

The Valuable Difference that makes Koylon the Finest Foam!

The hand-tied U. S. Foundation matches the scientific perfection of Koylon Foam. Tempered-steel springs are anchored 3 ways with a special twine, to the double rail frame of hard wood. All corners are reinforced. Exclusive Cloud Tucking.

The Koylon Mattress is full size. Take your tape measure shopping. It will prove that Koylon is full length, full width, and a full 4½ inches deep.

It's made from an unstinted, full measure of pure latex. It's not too hard nor too soft—but scientifically right for healthful, buoyant support. Only Koylon is reversible. Corings or air pockets on both sides make it so. And Koylon's millions of tiny air cells breathe to puff it fresh and clean when you move.

The valuable difference in Koylon makes it a lifetime investment in sound sleep. Why not discover Koylon, the most beautiful mattress ever made, at your favorite store?

want to become acquainted with the men who have written the music or the men and women who perform it. Like a lover, you will want to question your mistress. You will inquire eventually into the structure and form of music itself and its development. Once you like music, you can use the books.

It is difficult to write well about music. My recommendations will be found among those books which in my opinion are well written, which I have enjoyed reading. I have left out works which, though laden with information and worthy in their subject, need to be plowed through. On the other hand, I have avoided kiddie popularizations. Finally, my suggestions include only books which are presently in print.

You will want a general reference book. Groves' Dictionary is the standard work. However, it is bulky and expensive, and for most people a smaller book will suffice. Such a one has recently been published, The Concise Oxford Dictionary of Music, edited by Percy A. Scholes (Oxford). It is excellent and up-to-date. Among the general guides to symphonic music (program notes), my vote goes to Orchestral Music: An Armchair Guide, by Lawrence Gilman (Oxford). Also good are the Victor series published by Simon and Schuster. Symphonies are treated by Charles O'Connell. Concerts by Abraham Veinus. Ballets by Robert Lawrence. Overtures, Tone Poems, and Other Orchestral Works by Charles O'Connell.

For a general brief historical survey, I recommend two books by Wallace Brockway and Herbert Weinstock. One is called Men and Music, the other, The Opera (Oxford & S.). Both of these books are easily read as a historical novel and twice as rewarding. I'd say that for the beginning music lover these two books will supply much information and insight as I could wish for. More technical books highly to be recommended are The Orchestra from Beethoven to Brahms by Adam Carse (Broude), and Chamber Music by Homer Ulrich (Columbia).

Opera: You need a plot-telling book. You need such a book even e opera is given in English, for ve never heard an opera pered in English and understood he words. I think you should three books. Two, beautifully en, are Ernest Newman's Sto- of the Great Operas (Garden ) and More Stories of Famous as (Knopf). What style and Newman has! He discourses iently about the background e opera, the music, and the poser as well as about the plot.

e time you have read a chaper you really know something that particular opera. How-Mr. Newman treats relatively operas in his expansive way.
You want to follow the plot of opera scene by scene and blow low, use Complete Stories of Great Operas by Milton Cross (Doubleday). Here there is no attention at style or liveliness. The basis is on accuracy and many as are so treated. In fact, although any opera you are likely to read is narrated in the Cross book.
Shorter book, but well written and containing many fine photographs, is The Victor Book of Op- er by Louis Biancolli and Robert Bagar (Simon and Schuster), new edition of which will be available soon.

Biographies: Most great composers were troubled men whose lives are worth telling. Some of them were enigmas (Mozart and Mahler), some were delightful (Mendelssohn and Haydn), some were enormous personalities (Beethoven and Wagner)—but whatever they were, the strength of their music is in some way reflected in their lives. And so the story of the composer becomes more than just an ordinary story.

Look at the Master Musician series published by Dent in England. They are small, inexpensive books, but written with love and care and containing discussions of the music as well as the man. Unfortunately, they are not always easy to find. Try to get the ones on Mozart, Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Wagner, Debussy, and Verdi.

Here are some other outstanding biographies:

Beloved Friend by Catherine Drinker Bowen (Random House).
The story of Tchaikovsky's relationship with the woman who supported and encouraged him, but who, strangely enough, did not want to meet him.

Giuseppe Verdi by Francis Toye (Knopf). The standard work in English.

The Wagner Operas by Ernest Newman (Knopf). Not a biography but a discussion of the music, yet containing much biographical data.

If Wagner the man interests you sufficiently—as well he might—get Newman's great four-volume biography of Wagner, and also read Wagner's autobiography, My Life.

Mozart—His Character, His Work by Alfred Einstein (Oxford). Half a nontechnical book (his character) and half a technical book (his work). But the non-technical part is good enough to make the purchase worth while.

The Life and Death of Chopin by Casimir Wierzynski (Simon and Schuster). Written by a Polish poet, it is a sensitive portrayal.

The Man Liszt by Ernest Newman (Scribner's). A debunking book, and so interesting that you may enjoy it, even if you don't particularly care for Liszt's music.

Brahms: His Life and Work by Karl Geiringer (Oxford). A little too German in tone, but the best that is available on Brahms.

Floristan, The Life and Work of Robert Schumann by Robert Haven Schauffler (Holt). On the sentimental side, but read it because it tells a heartbreaking and beautiful tale.

On the subject of lighter music, there is A History of Popular Mu- sic in America by Sigmund Spaeth (Random House), fat with facts and very well written. There is also Show Biz by Abel Green and Joe Laurie, Jr. (Holt). Though

this is not primarily a book on music, I found it absorbing, an "Only Yesterday" of the entertainment world, conjuring up many a memory and giving some of the history of jazz, American musical comedy, and Tin Pan Alley. It has all the appeal of a family photograph album.

If you are a Gilbert and Sullivan enthusiast, you must not be without the new The Gilbert and Sullivan Book by Leslie Baily (Cassell & Co.). It is one of the handsomest biographies ever published. Its wealth of pictures is overwhelming. So, alas, is the price ($9). Another good biography of Gilbert and Sullivan is the one by Hesketh Pearson (Harper).

Among the miscellaneous collections, read Mendelssohn's Letters (Pantheon), which possess a unique gaiety and sweetness. These are perhaps an exception to the rule; they do help you to understand Mendelssohn's music.

An interesting anthology is Pleasures of Music, edited by Jacques Barzun (Viking). The book contains a collection of good writing about music, fiction, and fact. An autobiography of po is Memoirs of Hector Berlioz (Dor). If you are interested in conductors, the current bright of the musical firmament, Dictators of the Baton by D. Ewen (Ziff Davis) and a l about Toscanini, The Maestro Howard Taubman (Simon Schuster), which is not a defin biography, but full of good a dotes.

Finally, if you want to read s exceptionally well written cisms which are at the same brief chronicles of New York's sical scene, read Music Right Left by Virgil Thomson (H. Mr. Thomson is the music crit The New York Herald Tribune

This brings to an end the s of articles. "How to Use Musi Your Life." I hope they proved helpful. Have they? any words written or spoken a music lead you to the sound self, the art itself, that art w is so much more eloquent than commentary? I should love know. I should very much lik hear from our readers.

HOW TO LEAVE HOME and like it

If you like to stray from beaten paths, but with assurance of easy transportation, comfortable beds, and good food, the current rush to the Caribbean has advantages. While all this popular trekking to the tropics has overcrowded many islands, it is also responsible for modern conveniences in a number of places that are still seldom visited, although they are available both by air and by water. Alcoa Steamship Company, for instance, points to these, both on its British West Indies routes:

Antigua, a cool little sugar island not far from Puerto Rico, eminently restful, quiet but friendly, beautiful and cheap. Even in the capital, St. John, you won't run into more than a handful of American travelers at a time. Its Antigua Beach Hotel is comparatively new, one of the coolest, cleanest, and brightest in the islands, with rates beginning at a surprising $6, including meals. There are two or three small, pleasant restaurants, and at least one night spot, the Lord Nelson Club. This is a palm-thatched oasis run by an American who plans to convert the former U. S. HOUSE BEAUTIFUL
PACE SETTER HOUSE

Here is serene mastery of 20th-century techniques, the maturing of contemporary design. Here modern living comes of age and settles without shock into an older community. See how this house solves human problems while it achieves a quiet beauty

The NEW kind of Living Room

Never before in history has the living room been expected to perform as many functions for as many phases of living. We expect it to be all things to all people at all times, yet always be beautiful. This one is that versatile.

- it is quietly furnished, displaying nothing that is not for use, and using nothing that is without real beauty. The furnishings invite tranquility and repose, yet they are important enough for formal entertaining.

- it is emotionally satisfying, giving a sense of security and enclosure, even though it is open to the outdoors. This security is achieved by the rhythm and balance of solid walls and glass openings.

- it is visually exciting because of the way daylight is admitted, patterned and interplayed to create richness. Five kinds of light, from three directions, are composed here: (1) big plain sheets of warm sunlight; (2) cool north light coming through louvered shutters and frosted translucent glass; (3) dappled areas of leaf-and-twigs shadow patterns; (4) stripped light coming through clusters of wood dowels; (5) filtered patches coming through the embroidered screen-partition between living-dining areas.

- it uses practical surfaces where practicality is required, such as tiling in hall and the plastic-impregnated wood of the counter (behind sofa). Yet it uses luxurious materials where wear will be slight.

- it is flooded with sun in the winter, yet no sun enters in summer, thanks to proper roof overhangs.

- it looks twice as large as it really is, because the far wall of the terrace seems to be the far wall of the living room, because the gabled ceiling rises to 10 feet, because the simple long lines of the ceiling flow unimpeded for 31 feet across living and dining areas and continue outside through glass.

Living room seems to flow through its enclosing glass to claim the far terrace wall as its boundary.

A freer way to make a living-dining room

As our houses have increased in technical performance and complexity they have shrunk in size. It has taken nearly two decades for us to develop solutions that will recapture the sense of spaciousness of the big, old, inefficient houses of the past.

The living-dining area of this Pace Setter reveals one of the agreeable new solutions. Here are the advantages of separate rooms—visual separation, a dining table centered in its own space, “walls” for storage furniture. Yet both “rooms” have the advantage of seeming much larger. For they are one room, except for a translucent screen only six feet high, made of embroidered pineapple cloth laminated in clear plastic. Thanks to the filtered light, the screen does not seem bulky or like an architectural partition. Yet the four central panels are attached to the floor. The other four move to extend or shorten the screen.

An art object in design, a bit of stagecraft in function, this screen sets the pace for the development of a new class of translucent partitions between living and dining space. To see more of this screen, turn the page.

For more details of this living-dining room and the hall on preceding pages, turn to page 274.

How to make your home your personal expression

This Pace Setter shows, in numerous ways, how a home can be the personal expression of its owners and, at the same time, utilize the enormous technical benefits of industry. The home can be a place of creative experience because it gives us the opportunity to choose freely from the multitude of products on the market today.

As HOUSE BEAUTIFUL has been explaining for the last year, creative embroidery stimulates the potential creativeness that lies in each of us. Throughout this house embroidery ties together the structure and the furnishings. It also personalizes mass-produced merchandise by giving it a custom-designed look.

On these two pages you see how the simplest embroidery, done on pineapple fiber cloth, can make an important screen partition and companion table-mats. The colors of the embroidery repeat the colors used in the structure: the oranges and russets of the stone fireplace, the warm beiges of the plywood, the dark browns of the furniture. All these existed before the embroidery. But the embroidery unifies them in a unique pattern, personal to this house. To make the screen and mats impervious to wear and tear, they were laminated in clear plastic.

For details about the embroidery and table setting turn to "The Unifying Motif," pages 286-7

pace for 1953

Because it is the new house for the new life, the frame for the cultural revolution now occurring, where everything co-operates for the flowering of your personality

The Pace Setter, built in Bronxville, N.Y., shows how America is creating an industrial civilization. In this house, seventh of the Pace Setters, the standardized products of the assembly line (without which there would be no industrial America) are used for, not against, the development of individual culture (without which there would be no civilization).

Here in the Pace Setter the knowledge accumulated by America throughout the 20th Century appears as integrated wisdom. The house itself is a beautiful and practical frame for modern life with all aids for the comfort, convenience, and, above all, the aesthetic growth of its future owners.

By harnessing the horse-power of efficient machines, today's Pace Setter democratically achieves a luxury formerly dependent on slave-power, as in ancient Greece, or on domestic servants, as in modern Europe. But more important, it demonstrates how you can provide a personal setting for your personal life, if you freely choose from the vast variety of the current market.

How men build determines how men live. Here is the new house for the new life, the architecture for the cultural revolution now occurring. This revolution, as Lyman Bryson points out in his perceptive book, The Next America, "is not like anything known before because it is on such a scale of participation that past standards do not apply. If it succeeds it will be the creation, by its own members, of a national community in which energy is more and more shifted from material and practical anxieties to the doing of things for the sake of greater human experience. It will be the recapture, by a whole free people, of the primitive wisdom that industrialism has almost destroyed.

"In this new phase, wisdom will use industry as the servant of a better life. We shall be doing things for their own sake, which means for the developing experience they give, for the demands they make on personalities for greater power and sensitivity. And it is part of our recovered wisdom to know that we live not to pile up comfort nor ornaments, but for the quality of experience itself."

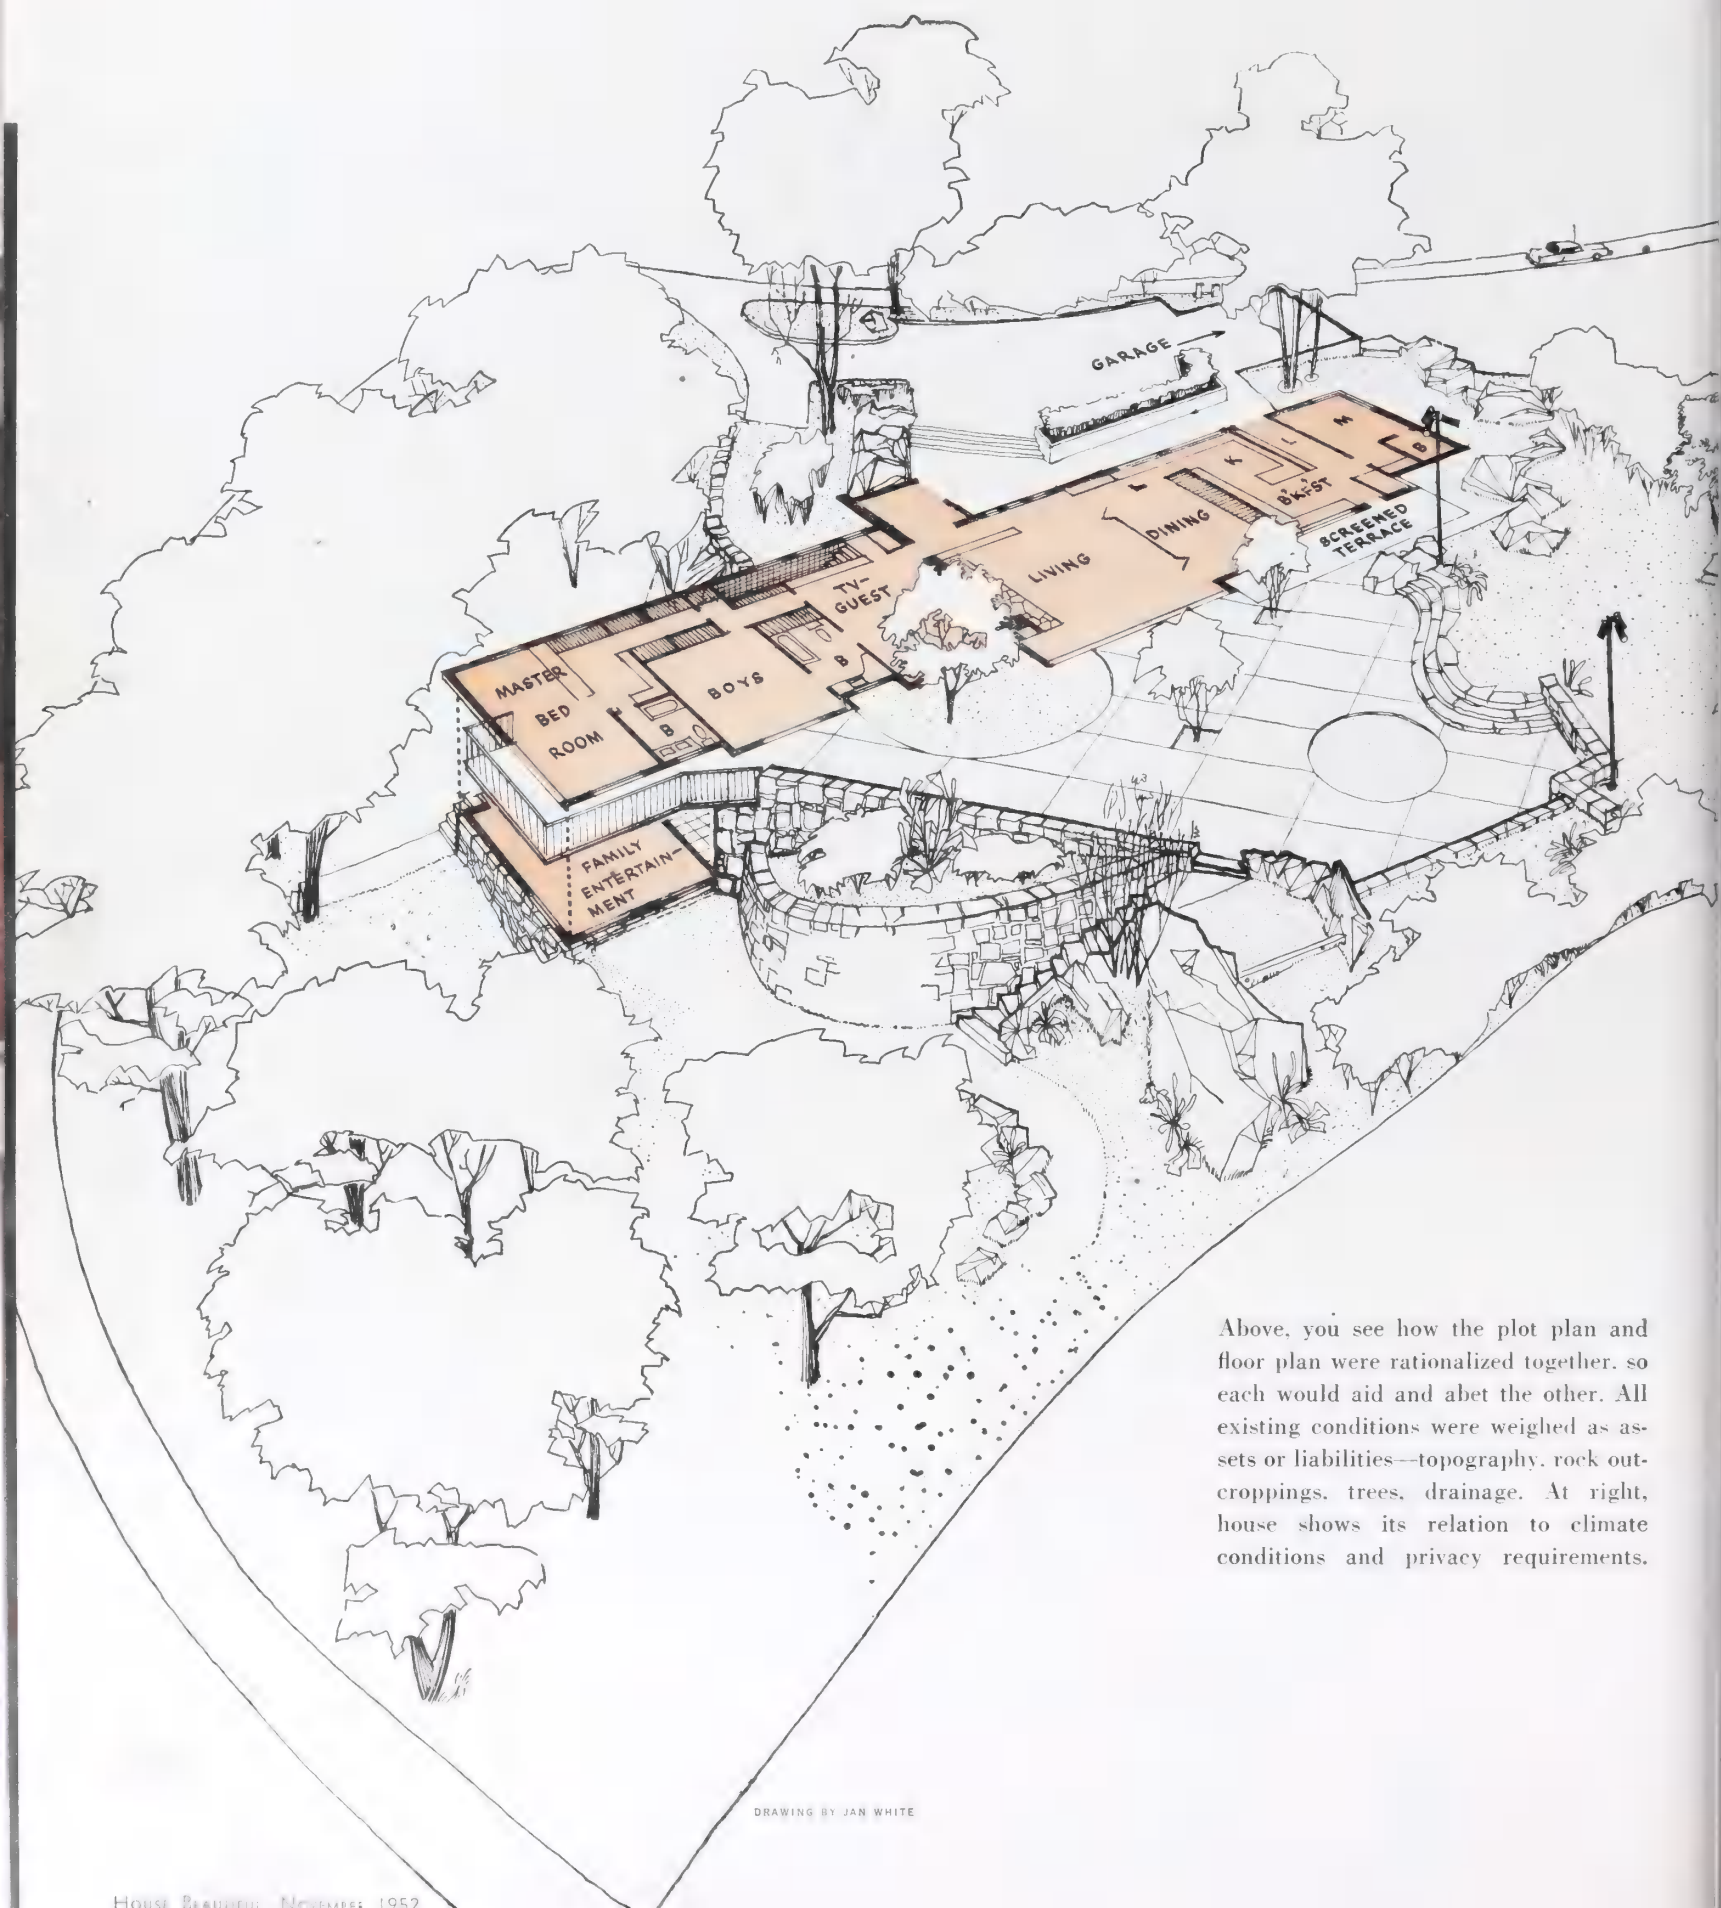

A good modern house, like this Pace Setter, directly affects the quality of experience of those who will live there. Good design can only be judged by how it encourages the mind, the soul, and the body to breathe freely and deeply. The architect must combine the benefits of mechanical aids with an appreciation of man's vital contact with the soil. The Pace Setter delights the eye and, at the same time, faces up to the facts of life, both social and economic. It offers a peaceful equilibrium of man and nature. It is at home with the landscape and humanity. For, if your house is not at peace with nature and with man, you will not be at peace with your house.

is at peace with nature

Above, you see how the plot plan and floor plan were rationalized together, so each would aid and abet the other. All existing conditions were weighed as assets or liabilities—topography, rock outcroppings, trees, drainage. At right, house shows its relation to climate conditions and privacy requirements.

DRAWING BY JAN WHITE

If your house is not at peace with nature, you will not be at peace with your house. But how do you put a house at peace with nature?

That depends on what side you take in today's life-and-death struggle between two conceptions of man. One school of thought claims that man is fundamentally a machine. The other says man is an infinitely variable part of nature. The first group also has a school of architecture which designs machine-forms for their machine-man and calls the house that results "a machine for living."

The second—and saner—group designs what is termed "organic architecture" to house the natural man. Just as a natural organism, such as a tree, has its own living and varied form, its own laws of individual development (no two oaks look exactly alike), so an "organic house" grows out of the site and climate and personalities of owner and architect.

The Pace Setter is a good example of an organic house. There is a lively and affectionate relationship between the house and its site, as if they were master and pupil. The house seems to encourage the emergence of the individual and special quality of the site, as the master tries to bring out the special personality of his pupil. Each looks to the other with warmth and understanding. Each is in repose and at peace with the other.

People in such a house are at peace with themselves and as they become aware of how living things grow to their fullest potential so they will feel stirring within themselves a similar growth.

This is exactly what was done to make the Pace Setter at peace with its site.

The architect and landscape architect made a "natural resources study" of all the assets and liabilities of the lot—climate, (Continued on page 353)

How the natural resources and climate of the lot were analyzed and exploited

The Pace Setter house was put on site of old mansion. Existing carriage drive and barn were used.

How to build a MODERN house in an OLD neighborhood

*As the modern house must be at peace with its site, so your modern house can be at home with its community,
if you understand the nature of good design*

For the details of how this old barn was made into a modern garage, turn to pages 308-

The old barn (above) was the only existing building on the grounds. Owner added overhang, overhead door, and new shingles to convert it to modern garage (at right). New structure still retains pitched roof and shingles characteristic of the neighborhood architecture.

Its architectural ancestors were good

Good design is the happy solution of all problems, the combination of function and beauty, the resolution of the practical and the aesthetic.

Good design in architecture is the satisfying answer to problems posed by site, climate, the special needs of the owner and of the community.

The lines of the Pace Setter conform to its site. Its materials relate to the colors and textures of its surroundings. Similarly, its profile and coloring take into account possibly the most dominant feature of its landscape: the profile and coloring of neighboring houses. To ignore them would be not only a gratuitous affront, it would be bad design. The Pace Setter settles into the community as it settles into the site—part of an aesthetic whole.

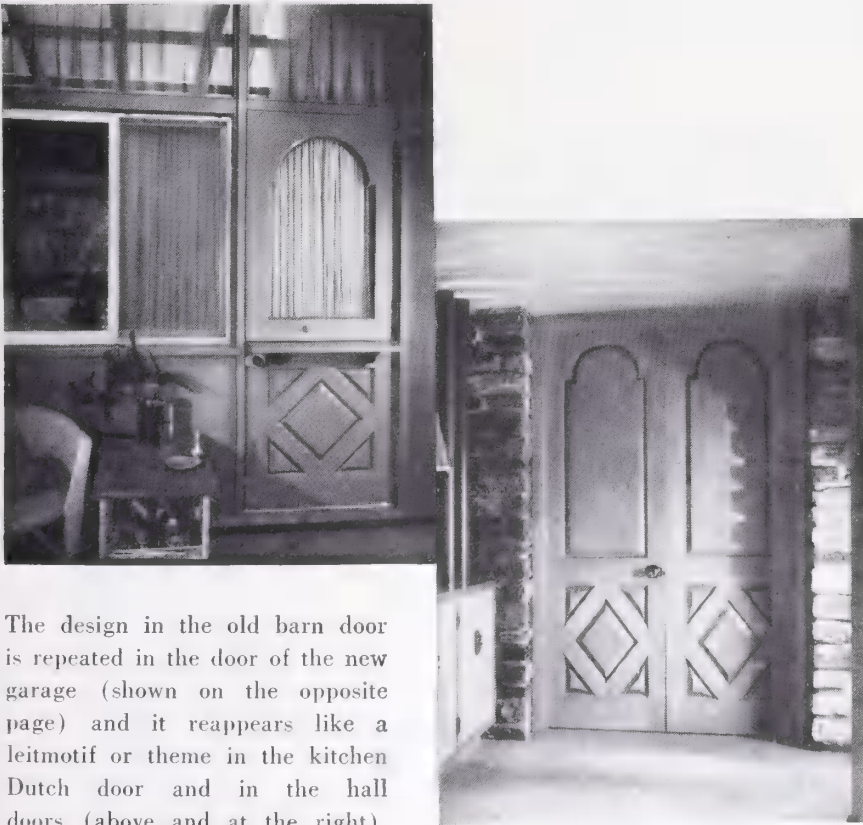

Good design for a house is never the arbitrary imposition of a particular style on a site or a community. It is the sensitive and sensible response to a particular situation.

The Pace Setter is at home with its community and itself. Its design encourages modern living, thus achieving a modern house; it also takes a welcome place in the scheme of humanity, while it guards its individuality.

The houses surrounding the Pace Setter were built in that creative period from 1890 to 1916 when the first seeds of modern architecture were being planted by architects like Frank Lloyd Wright, Henry Hobson Richardson, John Wellborn Root, and the Greene brothers. A trip around Lawrence Park, in Bronxville, shows that the basic principles for modern architecture throughout the world derive from such houses. You see unstereotyped functional forms fitting the landscape, gracious and unassuming, keyed to serve the owners rather than impress the visitor. You see great individuality and variety: original windows, fresh roof-shapes and roof details. Soft, weathered colors: moss green, sumac red, leaf brown. You see startlingly generous use of glass, both in walls and skylights.

These shingled houses were the prototypes for the Pace Setter, which carries on the tradition now becoming recognized as indigenous American Modern.

The design in the old barn door is repeated in the door of the new garage (shown on the opposite page) and it reappears like a leitmotif or theme in the kitchen Dutch door and in the hall doors (above and at the right).

Why the PACE SETTER is at home with its community

Stained shingles in warm, faded colors, rich stone walls, and generous glass openings were prevalent architectural idioms in 50-year-old Lawrence Park in Bronxville, N. Y. So Architect Henry Eggers used them in a modern, but non-stylistic manner

The owners of this house wanted to live a contemporary life in a contemporary house and enjoy all the technical benefits of our time. But they wanted to do it in a traditional neighborhood, where fine old trees, long-established gardens, and well-kept houses produced an atmosphere of stability and developed beauty. In short, they wanted livability—not publicity; a home—not an advertisement of their modernness.

Their architect, Henry Eggers, does not belong to the doctrinaire school which insists that a modern house must have a flat roof and be a glass box on stilts—a study in cubes. Therefore he accepted their problem without stylistic prejudices. He accepted the challenge of designing a modern house in an old community, and out of the uniqueness of this challenge came the quality of the house—a design that takes all the given conditions and solves them with practical originality.

Appropriately, he used the same materials, the same forms, and the same weathered colors that distinguish the neighborhood, and so composed the house with its community. Shingles and stone give the Pace Setter a family resemblance, and they are still perfect materials in performance. Likewise a pitched roof is still the best performing roof in a climate of heavy rain, snow, and freeze-thaw conditions.

These forms and materials became the elements in the new design. The result is relaxed, democratic architecture—a modern house that belongs, yet has an individuality essential to personal culture. Just as it is the essence of Americanism for each of us to develop our differences, so the Pace Setter, while honoring the general character of the community, arrived at distinction and originality because it freely solved the problems of a unique site and a particular owner.

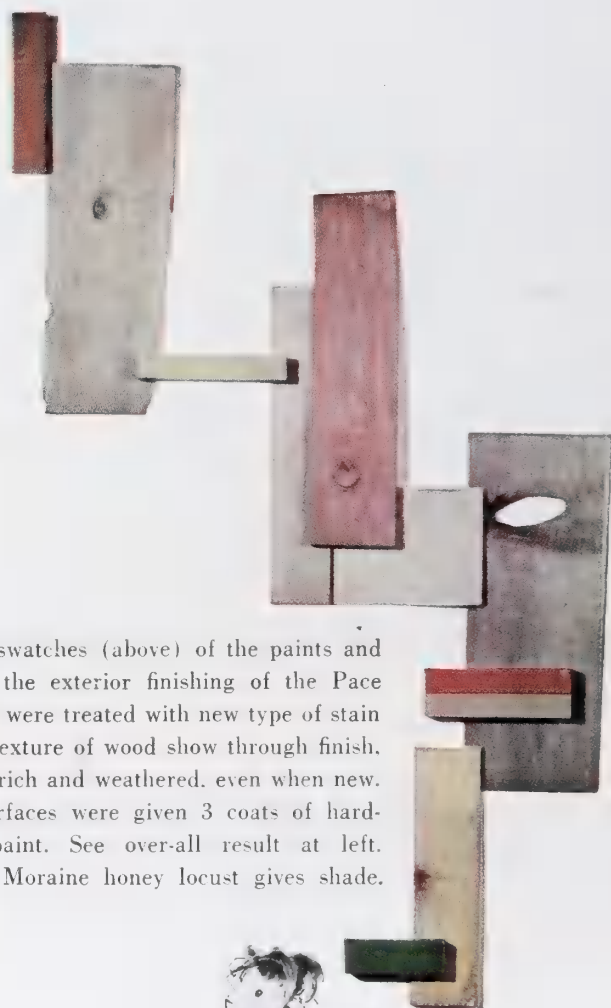

Stone, broken from the many rock out-croppings on this site, gave the theme for both the architecture and color scheme. This stone is rich in color—predominantly gray, but flecked with brown, orange, russet, and beige. Used inside and out, it keyed color schemes everywhere. Shingles were stained to relate to the stone and foliage and to look weathered. Interior color scheme also stemmed from stone and foliage.

The first tenet of good taste is appropriateness—fitness for the purpose and the occasion. A house, which is part of the natural scene, is more appropriate to that scene if it is colored to harmonize with its surroundings.

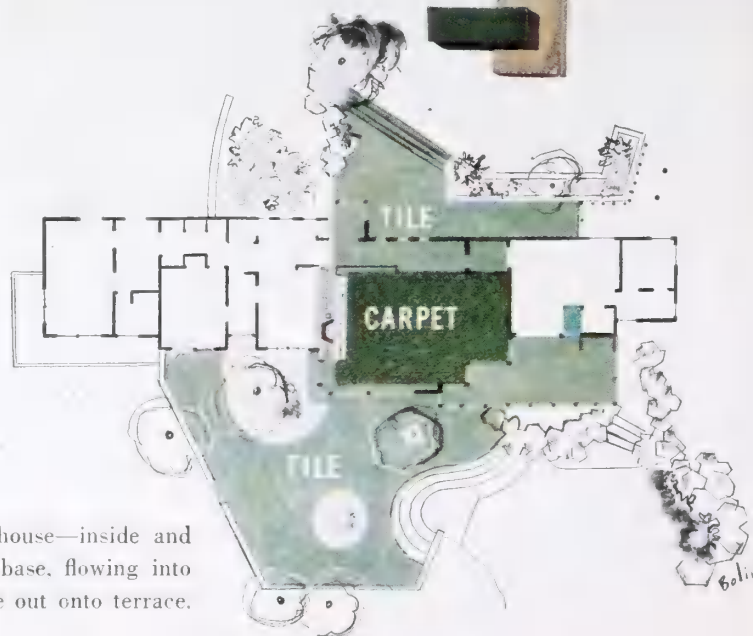

Most people are surprised to find how many colors for exterior paint schemes exist in the landscape around them. Eleven colors were used on the outside of this house. All derive from rocks, soil, bark, and foliage around the house. Shingles were colored with a new penetrating, preserving stain which does not hide the texture. Gray-green tile of paved terrace extends inside the glass wall to become interior floors. Carpet in living-dining area is the same green color. Even bronze outdoor furniture matches the tile paving and weathered gray-green of the house.

Close-up color swatches (above) of the paints and stains used in the exterior finishing of the Pace Setter. Shingles were treated with new type of stain which lets the texture of wood show through finish, making it look rich and weathered, even when new. Other wood surfaces were given 3 coats of hard-finish glossy paint. See over-all result at left. Quick-growing Moraine honey locust gives shade.

The living areas of the house—inside and out—sit on a gray-green base, flowing into house from front entrance out onto terrace.

How to make a terrace a climate-control tool

Weather can be manipulated, particularly in marginal temperatures when it is almost warm enough or almost cool enough. HOUSE BEAUTIFUL has proved, beyond argument, that a few simple tricks can take the curse off a heat wave, can add two to three months more outdoor living to every year. This terrace has four climate-control devices: (1) Tile paving is a dense material that will absorb, then re-radiate, the sun's heat in cold weather. Yet, (2) in summer, paving will be completely shaded by four deciduous trees of a new quick-growing type that will make an umbrella of foliage over roof and terrace within three years (full story on page 325). (3) Color of paving is not too light to be daring, or too dark to become a heat menace. (4) Glass walls have proper overhangs, calculated so no sun enters in summer, but penetrates deep in winter, bringing in solar heat through double-pane insulating glass. These pictures, taken at the end of June, show proper shadowing.

The modern terrace is a private sanctum, screened from the outside world by a judicious combination of plants and fences. The Pace Setter had privacy from the street because of a steep drop in grade. But the important south line needed screening. An 8' peeled sapling fence, stained to match foliage and house color, did the actual screening. A front planting of Russian olives, to tie in with native black locusts, prevents any "stockade" look. Plants alone would not give privacy in winter.

PHOTOGRAPH BY GOTTSCHO-SCHLEISNER

Wintertime need for a privacy screen is apparent in photograph above, taken before terrace construction started and native growth came into leaf. Balcony bridges master bedroom (two stories above ground) with terrace. See the enclosed, roomlike quality of the terrace combined in overhang, railings, balusters, and floor. Priming coat was white.

Mark of a MODERN house – the paved terrace:

- a great stage of glamour, day and night, winter and summer
- a private box from which to watch the drama of the seasons
- a three-season living room
- a private beach
- an outdoor play room
- a private dance floor, when tile-paved
- a low-maintenance garden
- a fourth dimension in modern living, because it adds two to three months of outdoor living to every year

Anybody who ever added a terrace to an old house has wished he had made it three or four times larger. For it becomes a second living room, catching the overflow from indoors. On a paved terrace, you can put furniture anywhere. Trees and plants are decorative art objects. Low walls can seat dozens of people at big parties, and don't have to be taken in out of the dew at night, as would most outdoor furniture. Terrace was as carefully color-schemed as the indoor rooms.

Mark of a modern house—the paved terrace continued

A terrace helps make the home more of a play center for children. It is an ideal place for bonfires, marshmallow roasts, and wading pools. It makes home more exciting than anywhere else, canceling the need for seeking family pleasures in private clubs or public beaches. To re-enact the happy scene below, all it takes is a portable vinyl wading pool, easily filled with a hose and as easily emptied.

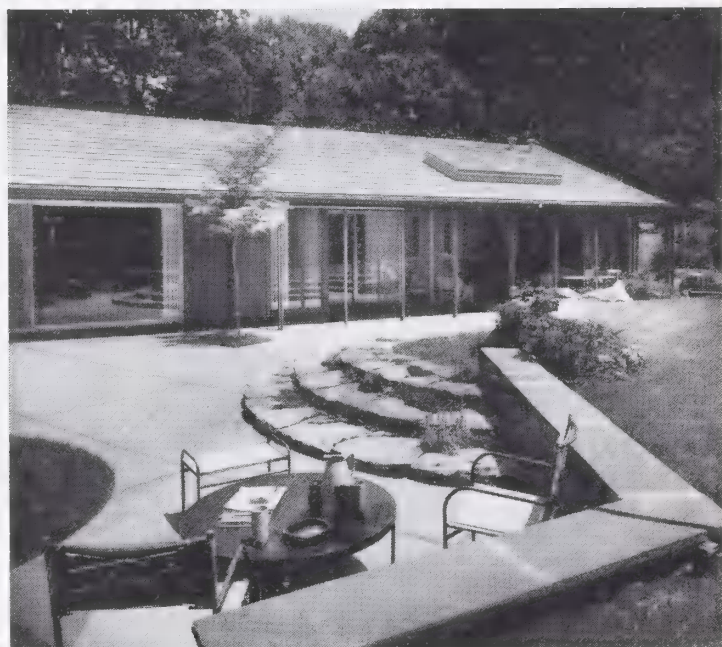

PHOTOGRAPH BY LANDSHOFF

A terrace gives you the space and the fresh air for holding large parties. Best of all, it's a place that can take the beating of a big party, for you can wash away the crumbs and the spots with a hose. Terrace parties permit informal service, making it possible to feed large groups economically and without extra help. Yet terrace parties can be as distinguished and elegant as an English garden fête.

A paved terrace has a higher initial cost, but a lower maintenance cost. For it puts more of your land under permanent control. You mow less grass, pull fewer weeds. The plants you grow around the terrace are woody shrubs, preferably evergreen, so your roofless room will look as well in winter as in summer. Or you do pot-gardening, concentrating a few showy groups of bloom where they count.

There is an unexpected resemblance between the modern terrace and the Greek amphitheater. Instead of heroic drama, there is domestic drama—day and night, in three seasons. If you wish, you can light the terrace and its backdrop like a stage set, spotlighting the most exciting trees, shrubs, and rocks. (Full details on the lighting of this Pace Setter terrace will appear in a later issue.)

THE SCREENED TERRACE

The Pace Setter shows a new way to merge porch and terrace making the porch seem twice as big and giving the terrace a section that can be sheltered from rain and insects. When screens are rolled up out of sight, it becomes one big, unified tiled area—part in the shade and part in the sun

Flexible bronze screen cloth rolls, like a window blind, up and out of sight, on guide rails.

The installation of the screens is so inconspicuous you are not aware of them.

It was inevitable that, one day, the porch and the terrace would get married. In many climates the screened porch is a summer necessity. Yet in spring and fall, a porch is too cool to be used because then you need to be in the sun to be comfortable. So if you want the fullest possible outdoor life, a porch is not enough.

The insect season in the Bronxville, N. Y., area is about three months long. Yet the outdoor living season can be seven months, if you use all possible climate control devices. This means there are four months when screening is not necessary. These screens roll up like blinds, and disappear into weatherproof pockets in the porch ceiling.

The key to Pace-Setting living—

Plan outdoors and indoors as one working whole

For spacious living, design all areas together—indoors and out—from the very start

This plan, as fine as any HOUSE BEAUTIFUL has examined, embodies the best values and practices. For fine living in 1953, it is required study on these points:

- correct, year-round orientation to the sun and winds.
- segregation of private rooms from public and service areas, and of motor court from terraces.
- through-ventilation in 7 rooms.
- 6 places for outdoor living for 6 kinds of weather conditions.

The Master Suite — private world within a world

Only a few feet away from the busiest rooms of the household, it enjoys the calm and seclusion of a private penthouse in a tree top

Observers of our gregarious times tell us that there is great need in our lives for quiet hours deliberately spent in quiet places away from the distractions and the demands of daily existence. We need room to hear ourselves think, to regain our spiritual and physical serenity.

The Pace Setter provides its owners with just such a rare place of renewal. At the west end of the house, the master bedroom, dressing room, and bath become an inviolable private world at the sliding of a door. The bedroom itself, built over the game room where the lot slopes away (see sketch), sits high above the earth, jutting into the tree tops like a ship in a sea of green. Sliding glass walls bring this restful, flickering nature pattern indoors. When they want to, the owners can sit out among this fresh beauty on their own secluded balcony.

At all seasons the placid, green-gold bedroom blends into its natural leafy surroundings. It has the mature, understated richness that comes of a careful but free mixture of fine things—modern walnut bedhead and tables, Finnish lamps, Japanese gilt-and-grass cloth ceiling paper. Paintings are Leon Kroll's "Spring on the Cape," courtesy Milch Galleries, and a pair of "Slippers," by Channing Hare, courtesy Grand Central Moderns.

PAINTING, LEON KROLL'S "THE YELLOW CHAIR," COURTESY OF MILCH GALLERIES

Material and physical comforts alone do not insure the "humanity" of a house. The real test is in the way it meets the intangible, but no less urgent needs of the human spirit. Far more than a mere sleeping room, the bedroom is a place in which to experience beauty at first hand—in the changing pattern of trees and sky, in textures and patinas of man-made materials, old and new. Desk and frame chairs are antiques; upholstered chair and chaise, modern. Good design makes them affinities.

Furnishings have a sitting-room quality, since this is a room for repose at any time of day. Chaise serves as sofa. Powerful pattern here would vie with the outdoors and come off second best, so eye-interest is achieved with texture—strié linen on chaise and chair, straw-textured bedspread, split-wood blinds, deep-pile wool carpet, a ceiling of gold paper patterned in grass threads. Door at left opens into dressing room, shown on next two pages.

There is deep meaning in the way the wonderful products of our times are used in this modern house. For there is no mechanical-looking starkness here, so often seen in modern houses where technology and the machine are admired for themselves, instead of for what they can do. What is stressed in the Pace Setter is the beauty and comfort our technologies make possible for human beings to enjoy. Only modern heat-conserving devices like insulating glass and heat-reflective drapery lining could make this lovely glass room feasible. Right: Sheets and pillowcases are yarn-dyed, sunfast color, "Dy-nel" mothproof, quick-drying blankets are embroidered in a pattern of leaves copied from the glass curtains. NORTH

How to get sunshine into a north room: Skylight allows sun to penetrate dressing room. Opaque plastic ceiling diffuses sunlight evenly. At night, it diffuses light from row of fluorescent tubes in "attic."

How to turn necessity into glamour

When you demand the fullest utility from a plan, a good architect can give it to you. Often a higher type of beauty results, like an unexpected dividend, from the stringencies of the problem. This dressing room is essentially an inside room, with a poor exposure to the north and one small window—for most of the walls were wanted for storage. But architect Henry Eggers could not accept this condition. He opened the ceiling and roof for a skylight. Result: a sunny, leaf-dappled, trellised arbor of a room, blessed with outdoor light by day and nearly as well lighted by night. Glamorous, indeed!

It is well known that the best light is sky light. It's the most shadowless, easiest on the eyes. So whole ceiling and one wall were turned into an ivied trellis. Emile Norman, artist in plastic, laminated real ivy between sheets of translucent plastic. The vine wanders up the wall and across the ceiling into adjoining bathroom. When sun shines the shadow of vine repeats on the floor.

The master suite

The double lavatory counter, made of small mosaic tiles, has an assisting shelf that turns the corner and runs under the mirrored storage cabinets. Result gives 8 lineal feet of counter top in a bathroom only 8' x 9'. Main storage space was developed under the lavatories. All supplies needed in bathroom can be stored here. Everything is washable, including the voile curtains.

Bath and shower stall stand right under the skylight, giving every encouragement to the bather to sing at his work. Tiled on three sides, closed with a clear vinyl shower curtain on the fourth, lighted by sunlight from above, one can well believe that bathing will be the pleasantest chore in the daily routine in this house. Towel rods are also clear plastic.

Ivy of ceiling is used as embroidery motif. On towels it is treated realistically with a "3-sided" stitch. On rug, it is developed abstractly with "raised stem" stitch. (See page 166, Sept. HOUSE BEAUTIFUL.)

How to have an "outdoor" bath in a cold climate

House Beautiful believes that your own bathing quarters should be as convenient and glamorous as any in the house. Here's what we mean

Nearly two thousand years ago the Roman architect Vitruvius said that good architecture needs these basic requirements: convenience, strength, and beauty—in equal measure. Too often one or two of these considerations are slighted. But in this master bathroom in the Pace Setter house all three attributes are present to a singular degree.

Lots of storage, lots of light day or night, lots of heat on demand, wipe-clean surfaces everywhere, ample counter space, three-way mirrors for close-up grooming—these are the elements that make this bathroom convenient. (Structural strength is taken for granted these days, thanks to our building codes.) Beauty it has to a marked degree, thanks to the sunlight streaming down through the ivied trellis via the skylight in the roof. The same sunny effect exists at night, thanks to fluorescent tubes.

Dressing room and bath act as sound insulator, segregating the master suite from the rest of the house, making it a little private glamorous world. A sliding door shuts off bedroom and keeps dressing room warm for winter mornings, even though bedroom is cold at night. This suite has five closets and 140 cu. ft. of drawers and shelves.

See the originals of these creative embroideries in an exhibition of the work of Mariska Karasz at the Bertha Schaefer Galleries, New York City, from November 24 to December 12.

To spur your creative embroidery, use Mariska Karasz's "All Square," originally worked on sheer, hand-woven wool in earth and other nature colors. In the denim reproduction see how the texture has been captured, how individual stitches stand out so you can even tell the couching from the running stitch. This is a 36" fabric in a palette of six colors. See it in draperies in the boys' room.

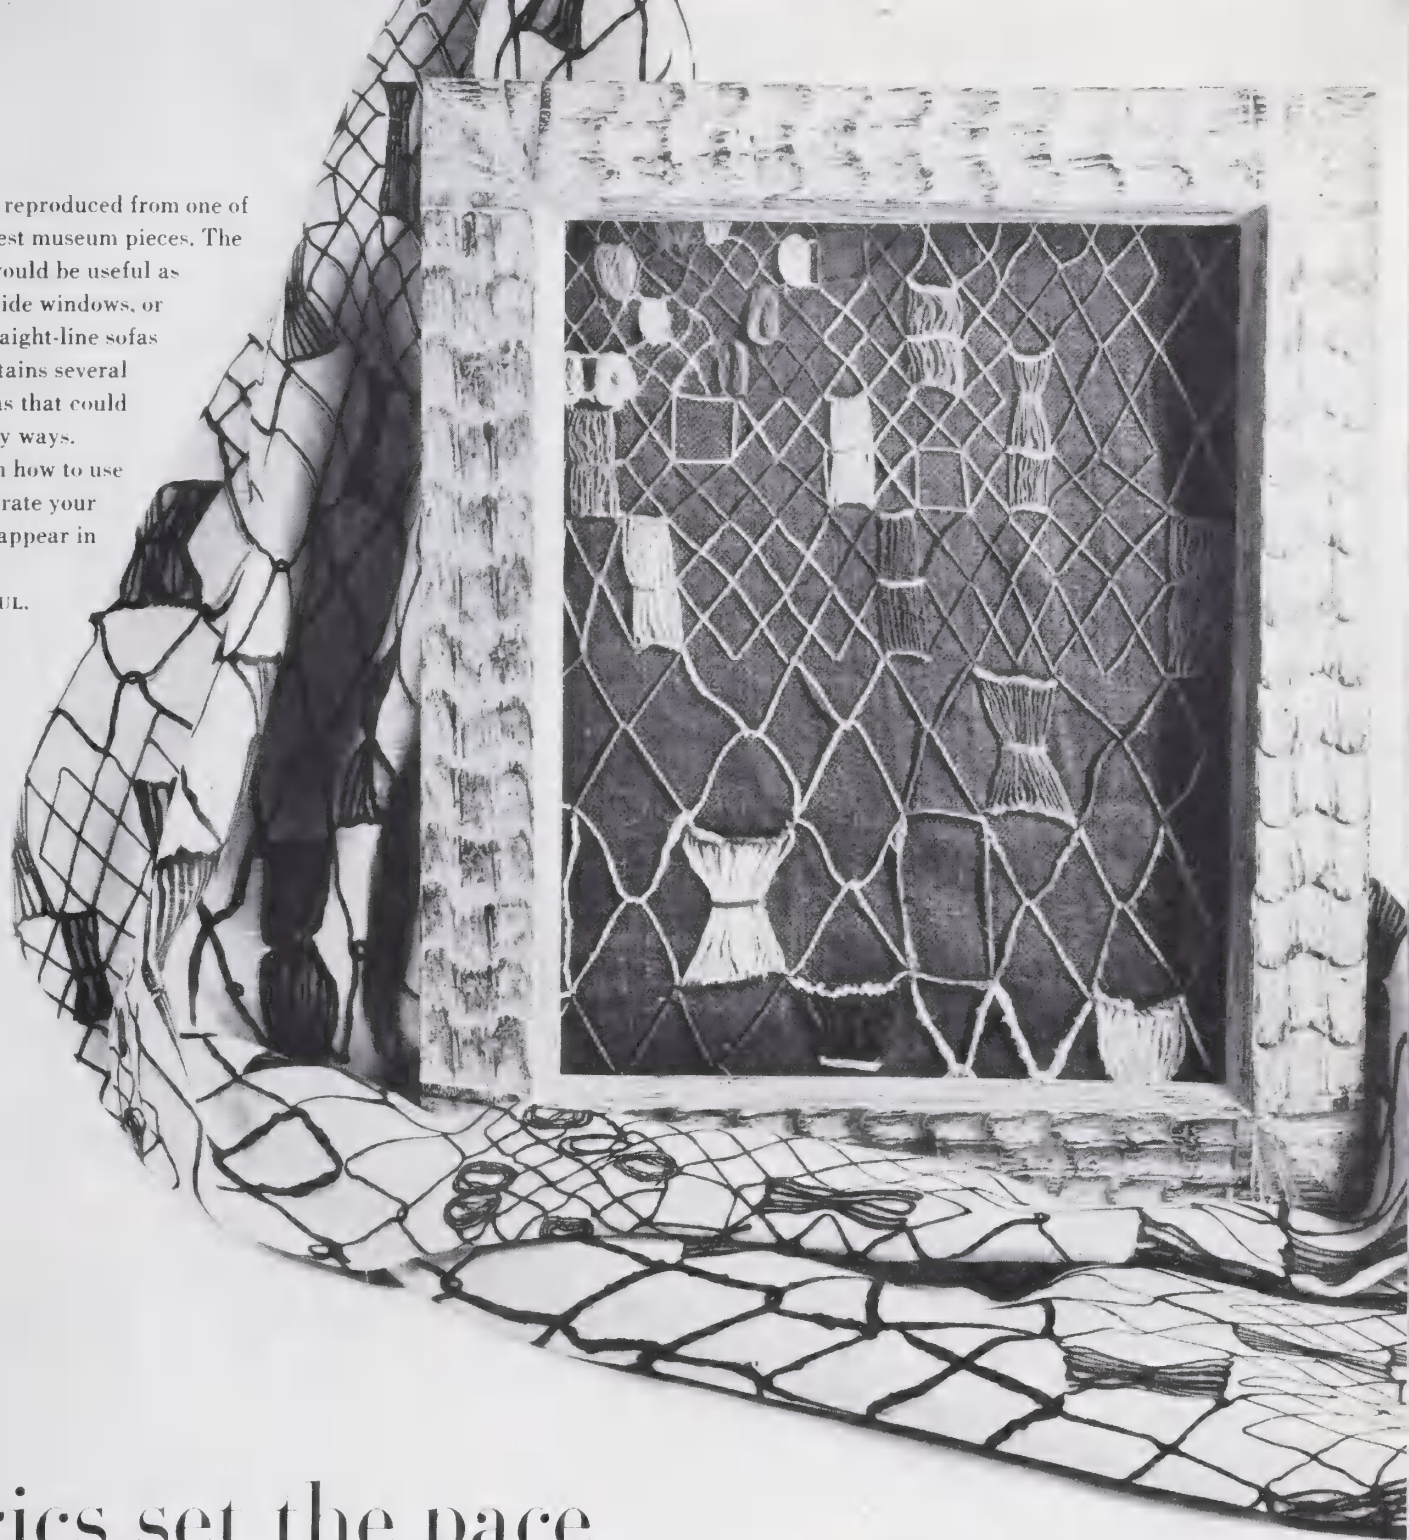

PHOTOGRAPHS BY ROLF TIETGENS

Pure silk gauze printed with Karasz's "Fancy Leaves," was designed to be used as glass curtains. Use lavishly at big windows, where light will silhouette the leaves. Then embroider drifts of leaves on pillows, chair seats, table mats, tablecloths, towels. Thus, you can integrate all the parts into a whole and make the whole greater than the sum of its parts. This is a sure way to achieve a custom-design look in a room. See it used in the master bedroom.

This is "Skein," reproduced from one of Miss Karasz's best museum pieces. The printed fabric would be useful as curtaining for wide windows, or upholstering straight-line sofas or chairs. It contains several embroidery ideas that could be adapted many ways. Specific ideas on how to use "Skein" to integrate your decorating will appear in a future issue of HOUSE BEAUTIFUL.

Fabrics set the pace for your creative embroidery

These three fabrics, used in the Pace Setter house, were designed especially for people who embroider by Mariska Karasz, our Embroidery Editor. They are being introduced this fall for decorating and for inspiring your own creative needlework

These Pace Setter fabrics were designed to help you stitch your personality into your home. They give you the opportunity to use mass-produced merchandise as a point of departure for your own personal expression.

Each of these patterns was designed first in embroidery and reproduced with the realism of the original stitching. They look so real that a beginner could learn how to do the stitches by studying the print. Used as draperies or upholstery, these fabrics invite you to "lift" the motif, varying it or adapting it, to enrich other fabric furnishings in the same room, thus turning them into unique and personal possessions.

Maid's work made easier

This remote unit in the maid's room is wired in parallel with master unit in kitchen. So all calls to the kitchen are also received here. At night it "listens in" on nursery as children sleep.

Boon for a busy room

With this master unit in the kitchen, there's no need to let the vegetables scorch or the sink run over while answering queries from other rooms. Every part of the house can be reached instantly. System costs less than a dollar monthly to operate.

DON'T WALK—TALK

An intercom system can save miles of walking in a long, rambling house. At night it's as good as an ear in the nursery

One of the hallmarks of the good modern house is the spread-out, rambling plan which tends to be one-room wide so that every room gets the maximum exposure to the sun, the breeze, the garden, the view, and all such good things of life. But this characteristic inevitably creates the need for a lot of walking—unless some way is provided to permit communication between distant rooms by remote control. The intercommunication system is modern industry's answer to this problem. Such systems have long been used in offices and factories as step-savers. Since the war they have come to be widely used in the new, spread-out, modern houses like the Pace Setter.

The intercom system in the Pace Setter house is really a little private telephone network. It can have as many as ten stations to talk and listen to. It lets you talk from the master bedroom with (Continued on page 296)

Greet callers instantly

You can greet callers instantly, after door chimes signal their presence, by means of this remote unit inconspicuously installed at front door. You needn't open door if caller isn't welcome.

Back door step-saver

It's handy to be able to talk from the bedroom with the delivery man at back door. These units are so sensitive that at night they may be turned on to listen for prowlers' footsteps outside.

The silent nurse

Night cries in the nursery are picked up by the unit and relayed to maid's room or parents' bedroom. Toggle switch opens unit to either room or shuts it off. Units blend well into background.

For upstairs calls

Station in family entertainment room downstairs lets you listen to children as they play there. And when you're entertaining there, you can call master stations and avoid trips upstairs.

Switchboard in miniature

Here is the other master unit in the master bedroom. See how compact it is, no longer than the telephone. Yet it houses a "switch-board" that can handle calls to 10 different points, and it has an amplifying device similar to a radio. Current is used only by two master stations.

PACE SETTER construction

This house neither discards familiar products merely because they're old nor adopts new ones just because they are the latest thing. On the contrary. The architect designed the best house for the family, the site, and the climate, and selected his materials on a basis of what was best for a given purpose.

For a variety of reasons, aesthetic and practical, the Pace Setter is essentially a wood house, framed and sheathed inside and out with wood and wood products. (Even the insulation is a wood product. See page 246. This, of course, is in the best American tradition. But wood, in its natural state, is a lively material, shrinking and expanding with changes in temperatures and humidity. Thus, when used in a form like shingles, wood requires many joints. The architect has exploited just this quality in his shingled roofs and walls. But by doubling every third course in the roof and all courses in the walls, he has achieved the rich texture ordinarily associated only with the more expensive hand-split shakes. He has used No. 1 red cedar standard-sawn shingles for roof and side-walls, and undercoursing shingles for the double coursing.

On the other hand, when wood is made into plywood, it becomes a quiet and stable material. In this form, it comes in big seamless panels of up to 40 sq. ft. This quality, too, the architect has exploited. All interior walls and ceilings are plywood. Painted plywood in the living room ceiling becomes as smooth and bland as plaster. On the walls, the inimitable depth and luster of fine wood veneers is preserved under a water-clear lacquer. On the tops of some of the built-in cabinet work, these same veneers are used, this time laminated in tough and durable plastic resins which give them an ice-smooth finish, alcohol- and burn-resistant. Elsewhere in the house, plywood walls are covered with paper and grass cloth.

This wood structure sits on top of a concrete mat. In addition to carrying most of the radiant heating coils (see pages 244-5), this mat serves as a base for a variety of flooring materials. All were selected on a functional basis. Thus ceramic tile was used wherever waterproofness and ability to take heavy traffic were required (see front and back entries, hallways, bathrooms, etc.). Where easy cleanability and high resiliency were needed, as in the kitchen and family entertainment room, vinyl and rubber tiles were used. Cork tile was employed in the television-guest room, bedroom (Continued on page 313)

A changing room for growing boys

Children's room in Pace Setter house calls for only one major change in basic furnishings from infancy to teen-age

A children's room can forestall a great deal of future "doing over" if it's planned from the start for long-range duty, if it uses sturdy construction and timeless design. The pictures (opposite) show two versions of this kind of room shared by two little boys. In infancy, cribs are obviously necessary for safety. Sailcloth curtains are unlined for easy washability. Cork floor, a cinch to clean, is uncarpeted until talcum spilling is over. Decorative screen between beds keeps one child from disturbing or distracting the other. Note the play screen with peg-board and blackboard for scribbling, and steps for climbing toddlers.

In the future the children will graduate from cribs to regular beds fitted with removable guard rails. The robust little chairs will continue to teen-age and beyond. Long low table, strong enough to sit on, is indispensable for games, snacks, and, later on, for study.

Outdoor areas and downstairs family entertainment room provide plenty of space for active group play, for hobbies, music, movies, and television. So this room can be reserved as a "quiet" room for sleeping, dressing, and the more tranquil activities.

Vertical basswood blinds in nursery (top right) bundle under draperies and pull across movable glass walls to let in air while cutting light during day naps. Center of floor is kept clear for play pen when weather prevents its being outside.

Walnut storage piece (left) for growing-up years, and later for guests, has usefulness and timeless simplicity of design. See how it depends for decoration on natural graining used vertically and horizontally, and note restraint of brass trim.

The action and color of the fine Boris Aronson circus paintings (opposite) have strong appeal to the young. At the same time, children are exposed to good art in formative years. Note Aronson water color over crib, later over chest.

This is how the heart of a really de luxe heating system looks in 1953. The good-looking utility room, on lower level next to playroom, knows whether the sun is shining, whether the outside temperature is getting colder or warmer. Its sensitive tentacles reach out everywhere, even to the outdoors, and relay messages back to the boiler, the mixing valves, and circulators. White tank is domestic hot water heater.

True cross ventilation for summer comfort is a basic requirement for climate control in most of the U.S. Seven of the eight rooms in the 1953 Pace Setter have it. (The eighth has its own attic fan.) Problem for rooms facing motor court and front entrance was: how to have privacy as well as ventilation. Answer: flexible shutters which would let the breeze in but stop the eye, yet always be easy to regulate. More about these shutters on page 260.

20 common-sense things done to Control the Climate

In Summer

1. Complete and generous cross-ventilation which is accomplished by:
  - a. Wide screened openings toward prevailing breezes and equally wide openings on the opposite side as outlets.
  - b. Use of louvered shutters to permit air circulation without loss of privacy.
  - c. Plants and structural screening at the lot line so that completely open living can be enjoyed (both indoors and out) without loss of privacy.
2. Forced ventilation
  - a. Attic fans pull cool air into house and
  - b. Create an air wash between ceiling and roof.
  - c. Smaller fans ventilate kitchen range, the barbecue hearth, and bathroom.
3. Heat-making equipment like hot-water heaters and clothes dryer are vented directly outdoors.
4. Insulation in all walls and ceilings to keep summer heat out of the house.
5. Shading by natural means where deciduous trees
  - a. Shield the house from the hot western sun and
  - b. When grown, will shelter both roof and terrace during daylight hours.
6. Shading by structural means, as with
  - a. Roof overhangs calculated to keep summer sun out of the house.
  - b. Shielding (by heat-absorbent glass) of skylights to reduce their heat transmission.
  - c. Use of porches and breezeways to make the transition from interior to outdoors gradual, to provide shady refuges, and to temper sky glare.
7. Landscaping which deftly blends cool grassed areas with paving.
8. Placement of the house so that it does not face the hot afternoon sun.
9. A floor plan that is essentially only one room wide, making easy cross-ventilation.
10. Placing a playroom area into the hill so that it is cool even in the hottest weather.

In Winter

1. Radiant heating system—Gentle, clean and invisible.
2. Split-load arrangement of the heating system—Floor coils carry two-thirds of the heating load, ceiling coils the extra third needed for extreme cold, producing uniform, efficient heat distribution. This also overcomes "time lag," provides quick heat as needed, as on winter mornings.
3. Zone heating control—Thermostats tailor the heat to the needs of different areas, so that warmer exposures get less heat, and colder exposures get more heat.
4. Anticipatory controls—Outside thermostats record quick and extreme changes in weather, so that the heating plant can adjust to them before indoor thermostats would signal the changes.
5. Supplementary heating—Extra heat is available quickly in the bathrooms. Circulating fireplace provides heat for the TV-guest room behind it, as well as for the living room it faces, is also emergency heat source if power fails.
6. Solar heating—Two devices are used for capturing the sun's heat:
  - a. Window walls on the south side of the house for full penetration of the winter sun.
  - b. Skylights to radiate sun's heat (and light) deep within the house.
7. Orientation toward sun and away from cold winter winds.
8. Landscaping with deciduous trees which let the sun warm the roof and south walls. Wind-and-snow screen of ever-green shrubs shields north walls.
9. Insulation by these means:
  - a. In walls and ceiling, a cellulose blanket to prevent convected heat loss, and an inner aluminum foil sheet to reflect radiant heat back into house.
  - b. Glass fiber along edges of concrete slab to prevent heat escaping into the earth.
  - c. In double-pane windows, with a vacuum between panes.
  - d. In storm sash on wooden windows—producing triple-glazing.
  - e. In the use of aluminum-coated curtain linings which reflect radiant heat back into the house at night when curtains are drawn.
10. Weatherstripping which seals all door and window openings against escaping heat.

What is a really de luxe heating plant for 1953?

The 1953 Pace Setter house demonstrates 6 heating principles that embody today's highest standards for producing wintertime comfort

For wood frame construction

For concrete floor slabs

Flexible steel tubing comes in 250-foot lengths, is bent into jointless heating coils, buried in slab.

The heating system of the 1953 Pace Setter house can not be seen, heard, or (in any positive sense) felt.

There are no artfully designed air grilles, no hissing radiators, no telltale dirt streaks on the walls and ceilings. There are no hot spots where heat comes in or cold spots where it escapes.

In fact, it is hard for the average person to tell that the house has a heating system. But no matter how cold it gets outside, no matter which way the wind blows or how hard, no matter how much sunshine pours in the big windows or how suddenly the outdoor temperature drops when the sun goes down, every room in the house stays completely comfortable, draft-free and pleasant to live in.

A snoopy soul, determined to ferret out the secret of this miracle, might notice that in cold weather the floor of the entrance foyer was quite warm—a feature of the system planned to take the chill off the shoes and feet of arriving guests.

By requisitioning a stepladder you might also find that parts of the ceiling, especially near the big glass areas, were hot to the touch. Following this clue further, you might also discover a narrow strip at the edge of the floor, in front of these same windows, that was much warmer than the rest. This is kept this way to neutralize the downdraft from the cold surface of the glass.

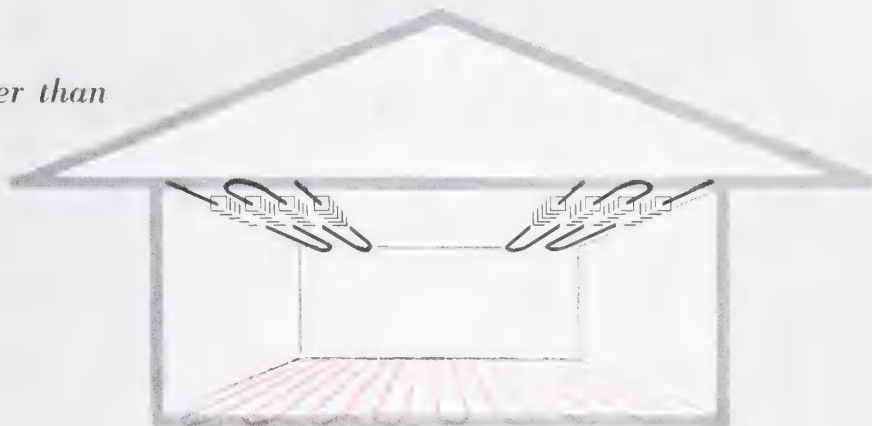

But the average visitor to the house, even in zero weather, is unaware of these things unless they are called to his attention. Unprompted, he remains as unconscious of the heating as he would on a spring or fall day when it was turned off altogether.

This absence of any sensation of heat or cold—physiologists call it the “absence of thermal stress”—has been the goal of central heating ever since Ben Franklin invented his circulating stove. You do not heat your house to “keep warm.” You heat it to keep from being cold. Both “cool” and “warm” imply discomfort. Ideal heating, like ideal lighting and ideal acoustics, stays in the background where it belongs and lets you live the way you want to in spite of the weather.

Such unobtrusiveness, from the point of view of both decoration and comfort, is the “one big reason” the 1953 Pace Setter heating system is so nearly perfect—the reason you would probably like such a heating system in your own house. It is the greatest virtue of “radiant” or “panel” heating, a technique imported from England about 20 years (Continued on page 266)

Constant, modulated heat from concrete floor panel varies with outdoor temperature, tends to smooth out "peaks and valleys" of usual on-off automatic heat. In mild winter weather, floor heat is then shut off.

Outdoor thermostat warns system of weather changes.

"Negative" thermostat shuts off heat when sun shines.

"Positive" thermostat turns on ceiling heat as needed.

North-south zone control prevents overheating south side of house during sunny hours and underheating rooms on north. Circulation of heating water on south side stops when temperature tops thermostat setting.

Maximum heating demand is met by floor and ceiling panels acting together, thus avoiding too hot floors. Night temperature in bedroom area falls automatically to desired level at time you wish, rises in morning.

The Pace Setter sets A NEW HIGH

This house fights New York's rough climate with extra powerful insulation that insulates two ways at once—the “fluffy” way and the “shiny” way. The windows, too, have extra insulation. Ever heard of heat-reflective draperies?

In planning the insulation for this house, the architect faced up to the biggest comfort problem of the modern house: the “comfortizing” of windows. A window is lovely to look at, but not nice to be near. It wants to roast you in summer, chill you in winter. In an old-fashioned house, this isn't much of a problem because the windows are small, and the heating and chilling effects are small. But even in the old-fashioned house, you feel the need for storm windows, window shades, curtains—which are, when you think about it, devices for making windows comfortable. And in the modern house, with its big glass areas, the heating and chilling effects become so big they can spoil the house. Especially so in a rough climate like New York's. “Big Glass” is nice to have, but it's got to be tamed.

The architect tames glass, first of all, by facing it south. That's basic. It's so basic that you might easily overlook it in studying this house: so we mention it. Big Glass should always face south, because only south-facing double glass holds heat better than single, but still loses some. Your heat jumps direct to cool inner pane, to colder outer pane, then outside, chilling you. Big Glass therefore needs draperies.

On cold winter nights

Double glass can heat house

When the sun shines in winter, double glass acts as a sieve. It lets the warmth of the winter sun into the house, keeps the cold of the winter air outside.

Novel draperies insulate

Draperies are lined with a new metalized fabric that's heat-reflective. Your body-heat can not “jump” to the cool window. Instead it is bounced back off draperies. This keeps you warm.

SKETCHES BY WALTER HORTENS

IN INSULATION

glass can be protected by an overhanging roof that throws shade on the glass in summer, lets the sun shine on the glass in winter. An overhanging roof doesn't do much good on the east or west sides of the house. Glass facing east or west is, therefore, very difficult to tame—West Glass especially so. On summer afternoons the sun shines through it unmercifully; in winter, west glass gets very little sunshine. (In this house the west side is shaded exceptionally well by foliage; the main floor's west end is, in fact, right in the foliage. This makes the relatively large west window permissible. It would be a source of discomfort on an average site with no special west protection.)

The architect tames big windows, next, by insulation. Because that's what Double Glass really is—insulation. The air trapped in the space between the two panes, the air clinging to the surfaces of the panes, is what does the insulating. Double Glass is a must in rough climates, like New York's, if you want Big Glass. It not only keeps the cold out in winter but also, to some extent, the heat in summer. This house uses the most luxurious kind—two panes permanently sealed in one frame. No moisture or dirt can get in between. You clean it as if it were only one pane. It can be handled as one pane, looks like one pane. But you get the insulating value of two panes.

The architect tames Big Glass further by still another form of insulation—draperies. This house has very special draperies. They are heat-reflective. Now, most people think of draperies only in a decorating way—how they look, what they do to the light. So we had better back off a little and see what draperies have to do with heat. This will not bore you because it connects up with the whole money side of glass.

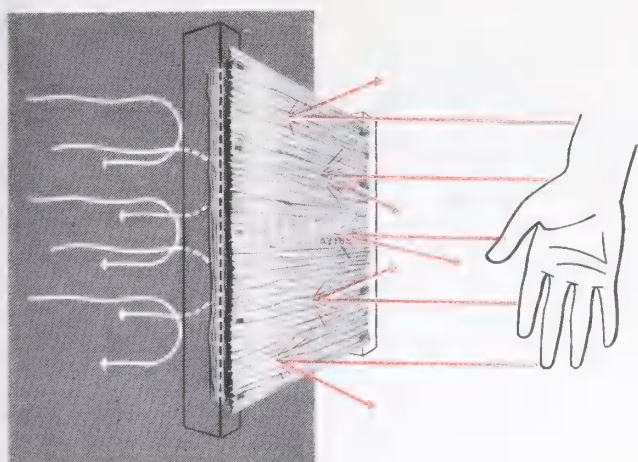

How much extra does it cost you in heating bills to have a lot of glass in your house? It depends largely on your draperies and how you use them.

Here is the money side of glass. When the sun is shining in winter, glass saves you money. The glass keeps the cold air out, but lets the warm sunshine in and heats the house so effectively that your thermostat presently turns off your furnace. Even on cloudy days, glass often picks up a surprising amount of sky-glare heat—sunshine diffused through the clouds. So, during the middle hours of a winter day, Big Glass often gets you free heat and saves you money.

When the sun is not shining (on winter days with thick cloud and at night), glass costs you money. No use kidding ourselves—a window, even a double-glazed window, is not as strong a barrier against cold as a well-insulated wall would be. So, as you increase the size of windows, you lay yourself open to the cold. What happens is that the cool window pane acts as a “radiant cooling panel” and, just as a radiant heating panel heats everything in a room by radiation, so a cold window pane cools everything by radiation. If this radiant cooling goes on all night, then by morning, everything in the room is thoroughly chilled. Not only the air is cool, but also the furniture, the floor material, the wall material, the plaster of the ceiling. To restore comfort, you now have to run your furnace extra hard for several hours. This costs money.

And that's where the draperies come in. If you draw a good solid curtain after dark, you cut the room off from the cold radiation of the window pane. The heat that is stored in the furniture, in the walls, ceiling, floor, etc., stays, more or less.

Double-barreled action

Wood-fiber insulation in walls and ceilings is a blanket of fluff faced with heat-reflective metal foil. It insulates by two methods at once: The foil bounces back escaping heat, while the fluff slows it down by trapping it.

Good summer ventilation is no accident

Modern heating plants and modern construction are so effective that winter comfort is actually easier nowadays than summer comfort. For unless you are going to have full air conditioning, summertime comfort requires close attention to good insulation, good shading, and positive, forced ventilation. The Pace Setter has all three attributes.

Prevailing summer breezes in the area of Bronxville, N. Y., are from the south and southwest. Every major room in the house faces in this direction. Except at one point, the house is only one room wide. Since all rooms have large, openable windows on both windward and leeward sides, they will have positive natural cross-ventilation (see diagram below)—if there's any breeze blowing.

But when the breeze fails, as it often does after sunset, the house is equipped to manufacture its own breezes. Three strategically placed attic fans (see diagram on facing page) have a two-fold function: They pull cool air in from the outside and simultaneously exhaust hot air from inside the rooms. In the process, they accomplish a third task. By forcing this air to flow across the entire length of the attic and out the louvered gable ends, they also cool off the hot roof and attic by the air wash. (The flaw in many houses is that their unventilated attics often cause more discomfort than the weather itself, since they accumulate heat all day and re-radiate it down upon helpless victims all night.)

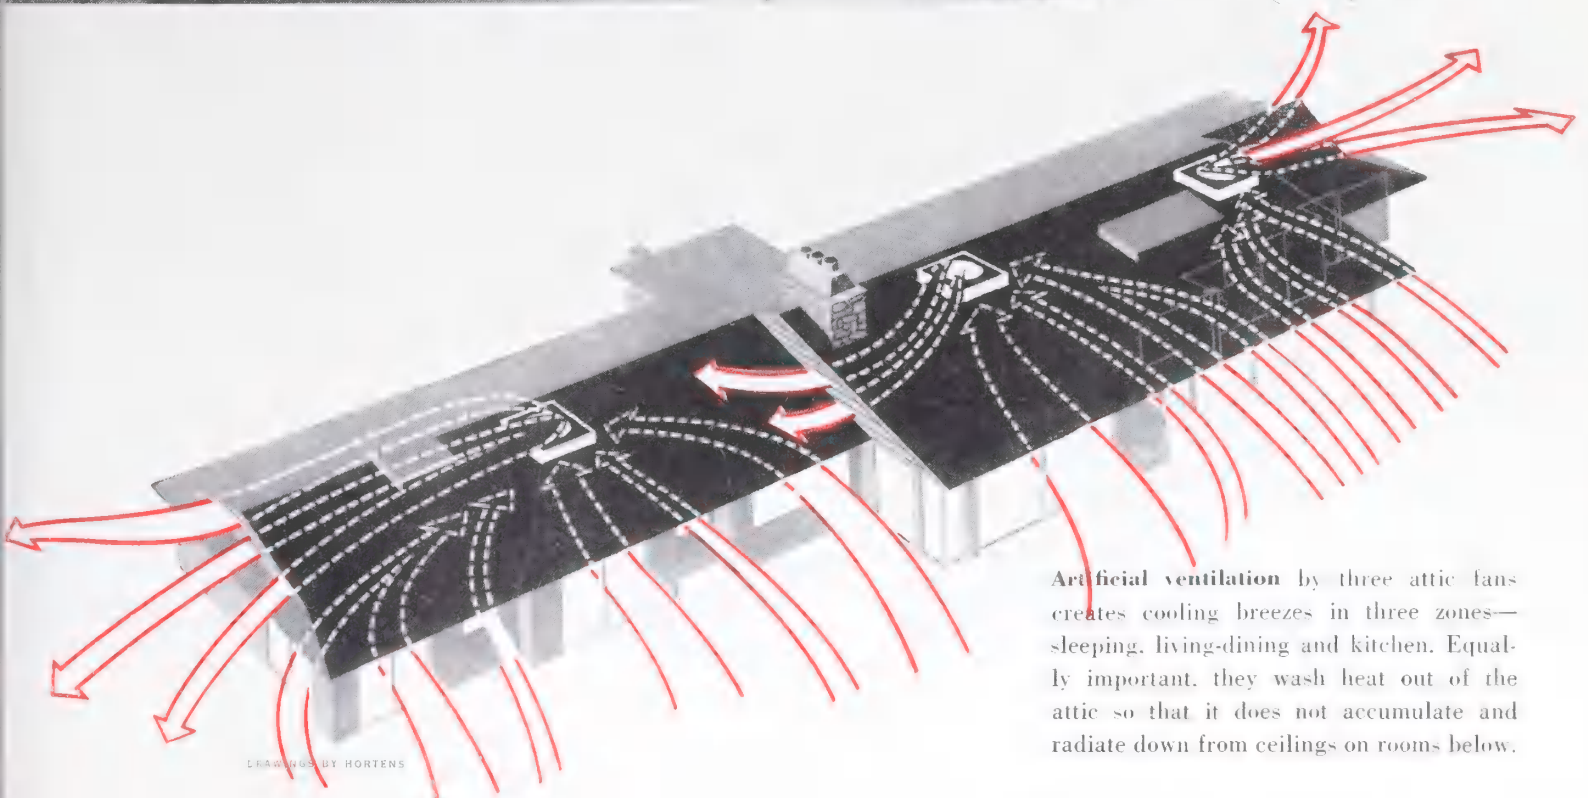

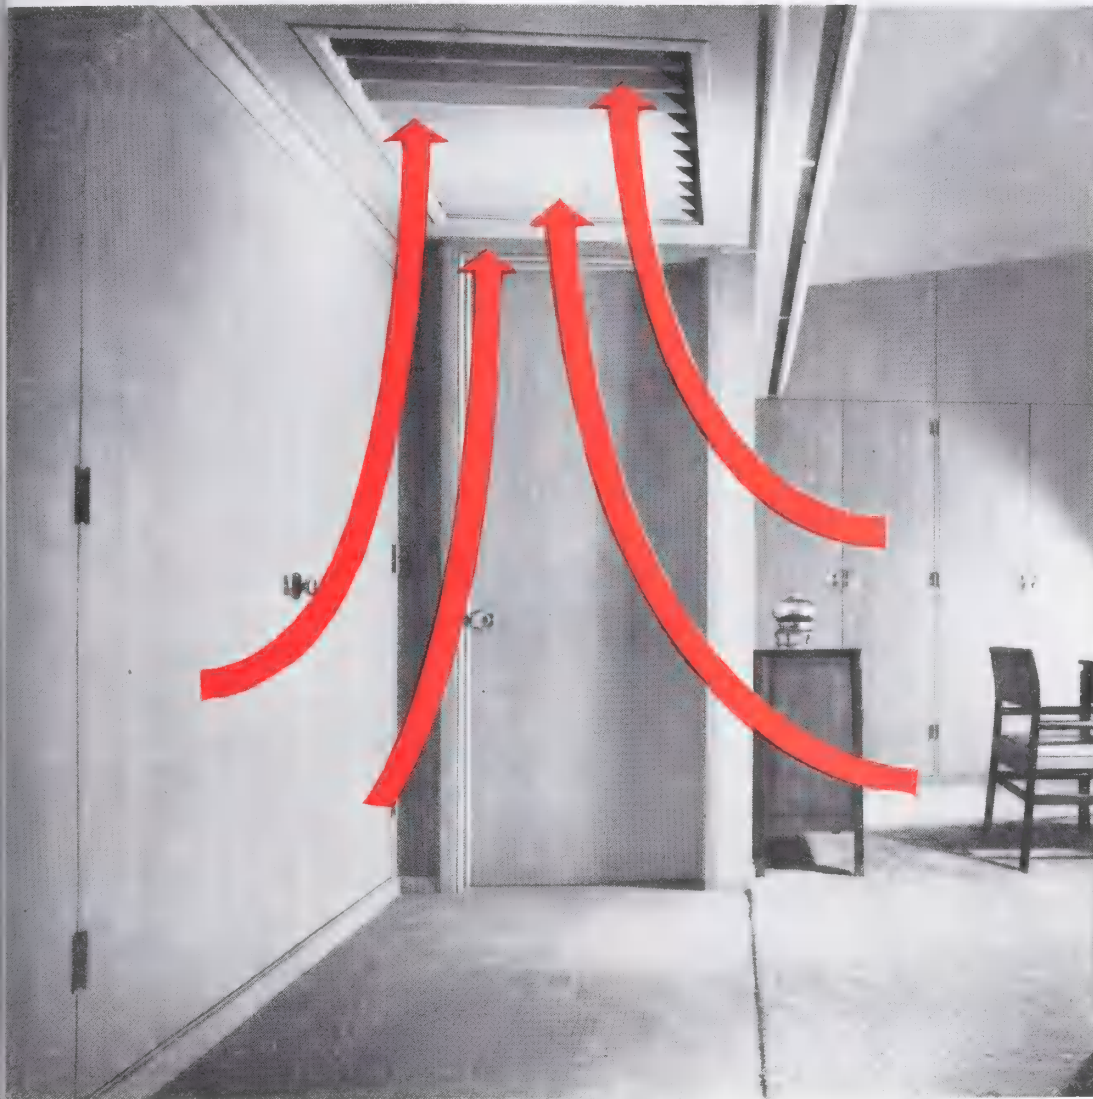

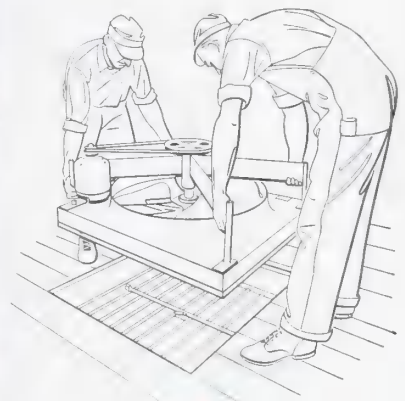

Of course, to convert a house from a snug heat trap in winter to a wide-open breeze trap in summer requires, among other things, first-class windows and doors. See how the openings of the Pace Setter were made weather-tight for winter, on page 254.

Natural ventilation allows summer breezes to sweep refreshingly through every room of the Pace Setter house because it is broad-side to prevailing wind. Note outlets for ventilation are as numerous as inlets. Total area of all openings is 500 sq. ft.

The breeze is man-made under this attic fan which can move 6,800 cubic feet of air per minute. When the fan is off, louvers in the ceiling lie flat, as shown directly above. When the fan is operating, air pressure forces the louvers upward and open, as at left. Such fans can also exhaust stuffy air in winter. Heat loss is then not as noticeable as you'd think, since heat is radiant, not convected.

Artificial ventilation by three attic fans creates cooling breezes in three zones—sleeping, living-dining and kitchen. Equally important, they wash heat out of the attic so that it does not accumulate and radiate down from ceilings on rooms below.

The Kitchen, Pantry, and Laundry

December will show the mechanically perfect, motor-driven Pace Setter working core. It's significant because it does far more than eliminate drudgery. Its color, lighting, and furnishings are as aesthetically enjoyable as any other part of the house, so that all time spent here is an experience in good living.

For more details about these rooms, turn to page 299

Night Lighting and Plastics

In July we'll show Pace Setter solutions to certain new problems presented by a glassy house and garden-level living: how terrace lighting prevents inside glass walls from becoming black mirrors at night, seeming to extend rooms to the very lot line. In February: how plastics are a new fine art.

The Family Entertainment Room

In February you'll see how the durably furnished downstairs game room serves young and old and acts as a shock-absorber, diverting wear and tear from the main living quarters. Children play here by day. At night, adults use it for cards, dancing, movies. It's equipped with TV, radio-phonograph, electric organ.

The Maid's Room

This room alone will tell you a lot about the enlightened thinking behind the whole Pace Setter house. It recognizes the dignity of domestic labor by providing the household helper with every comfort and amenity the owners themselves enjoy, including a private outdoor terrace. Full story appears in December.

The Sun-Borrowing Porch

Here is a lesson in how to make a north room into a southern room, glowing with sunniness in the winter but cool in summer. The Pace Setter porch, on the south side of the house, would normally make the kitchen behind it dark and gloomy. The cure is a louvered skylight. We explain it in December.

The Television-Guest Room

One room contains the built-in television, radio, and record player; it can be regularly used as a study, and is always ready, without looking obvious about it, to accommodate two overnight guests. Sofa has a trundle bed and guests share the children's bathroom. We analyze this room in January.

Hardware and lighting fixtures – the jewelry of the modern house

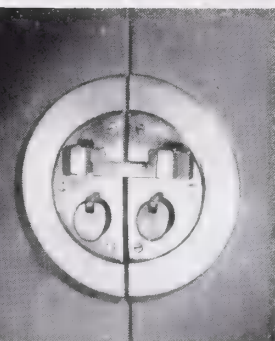

Paavo Tynell makes his bright brass fixtures shine, even at night, with tiny perforations, which twinkle with light.

The modern house with its natural materials and dull finishes needs the sparkle of metalwork. Here is what we mean by sparkle

TWO PHOTOGRAPHS BY WILLIAM HOWLAND

Brass and pewter pulls of Chinese design are rich, without being elaborate. One at right has been mounted on a satin aluminum escutcheon to give it importance on a tall door.

All the purely functional hardware is well designed. Even the front door lockset of brass, which can be unlocked and opened with one hand, is beautifully sculptural.

Doors and windows that snare the breeze but snub the gale

It used to be that every time you put an opening in the wall of a house you gave heat a chance to escape. All the unweatherstripped cracks around doors and windows used to add up to a hole one-foot square in a three-bedroom house.

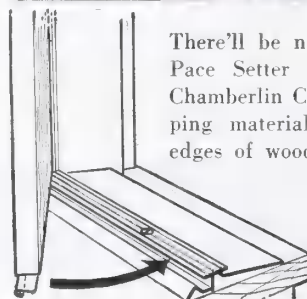

In the old days you simply kept outside walls as free from openings as possible. And you reduced the size of openings as much as possible. Or else you resigned yourself to big heating bills, an oversize heating plant, and drafty winters.

But modern weatherstripping and insulating of glass openings lets you have your cake and eat it, too. The Pace Setter house keeps cool in summer because it has 5 sq. ft. of openable windows and doors, so placed as to let in even breeze. Yet in winter weatherstripping and glazing close them tight.

All Glide Aluminum doors and windows are factory-equipped with metal weatherstripping. Exterior wood doors, windows in the hallway and above the stairs, and casement windows have been weatherstripped by the Chamberlin Co. of America. Family entertainment room sliding doors are protected.

There'll be no heat or dust seeping through this Pace Setter entry door, weatherstripped by the Chamberlin Co. of America. The zinc weatherstripping material, sturdy but unobtrusive, seals all edges of wood exterior doors with tight interlock.

STYLING THAT INFLUENCES YOUR CHRYSLER-BUILT CAR

From the dramatic cars on this page — each an example of creative styling and engineering — come advances that appear in every Chrysler Corporation car.

Chrysler designers and engineers developed the K-310, the C-200 and the new Chrysler Phaeton to express certain ideas of construction and styling — to put to the test of steel and fabric their newest, most promising automotive developments. A superior motor car evolves; it does not suddenly come into being: these graceful, pleasing designs, and the lessons learned perfecting them, are reflected in the creation of your Plymouth, Dodge, De Soto or Chrysler.

These, therefore, are "idea cars" — expressions in line and in form of the imagination always at work at Chrysler Corporation. Exciting outside and inside, they reflect continuing Chrysler principles — that beauty, in an automobile, follows function, and that car designs can best be created by designers and engineers, working together.

THE K-310, designed and engineered by Chrysler and handcrafted by Ghia of Turin, Italy. Only 59" high, with a wheelbase of 125½", it is designed to use the Chrysler FirePower V8 Engine and full-time Power Steering. This "idea car" represents an entirely new American theme in motor car functional styling.

THE C-200, designed by Chrysler and handcrafted, like the K-310, by Ghia of Turin, Italy. It is powered by the Chrysler FirePower Engine and its brakes are the new, exclusive Chrysler self-energizing disc type. The handsome chrome-plated 17" wire wheels combine lively sports car styling with practical brake-cooling design.

of the winter requirement. Ordinary window glass can "drain" 10 per cent of the heat in a house. Without the proper technical precautions, the loss could be very great in a glassy house.

You can stop this by double-glazing. "Thermopane" does this so inconspicuously that at first glance you don't suspect its presence. What appears to be a single pane is really a sandwich of two panes enclosing a dehydrated air space that stops the heat and prevents fogging of the glass in cold weather. Thus it lets you insulate large openings where conventional storm sashes would be too heavy and bulky to handle. Nor does it have to be taken up or taken down seasonally, ending a chore all homeowners dread.

Andersen Gliding Window units in two of the rooms use the time-tested storm window, but greatly streamlined. They can be left year round, for they ride on sash and do not prevent the opening of the windows. Thus they insulate in the summer as well as in winter and never need storing.

DRAWINGS BY SIGMAN-WARD

Here's how to glaze, insulate, and screen a 16-foot opening so your eye is never conscious of enclosure. Aluminum sash, by Glide, is used for its trim details, neutral color, and roller-bearing operation. Edges are sealed by a continuous, resilient stainless steel weather-strip. Storm sash would have been too cumbersome for such big openings. So all big windows and window walls are glazed with "Thermopane" to keep out cold yet admit warm winter sun. In summer, half of window walls open to let breezes in.

Andersen Gliding Windows are used in playroom here and in maid's room for easy operation and maintenance. Wood sash and frame are factory pre-fitted, weather-stripped, and treated with preservative and a water repellent. The sketch at left shows the relationship of sashes and double-pane "sandwich" made by storm sash.

Above, you see how right-hand sash slides to left. Track in warp-proof plastic sill guides sash toward inside of sill and parallel to other sash, leaving right half completely open. For very hot weather or for cleaning or installing screens and storm sash, both sashes can be lifted and pulled out from bottom. Screen, left, covers entire window.

A new kind of basement stairs

You needn't worry about what children or pets—or your own muddy feet—will do to this stairway. Clad in enduring clay tile, it's tough yet easy to clean

If any place is likely to show abuse, it's the stairway. But not in the Pace Setter house. Stairs there descend to the playroom on bedrock and are flanked by the house foundations. So stairs and sides were clad in tough ceramic tile. Water, mud, or sand won't dim its clean, lustrous surface. Children and pets can't hurt it. Time or sun can't fade it. Cleaning is a matter of minutes; maintenance you can forget—the tile's in for life.

Note how the rectangular pieces were laid in a vertical or "soldier" course. The color is chocolate for some of the tiles, while others have chocolate variegated by flecks of a lighter tone and are called "Velvetex." For safety, edges of stair treads are defined by strips of lighter colored tile. Tile is porcelain type.

If you were to see this stairway 20 years from now, it would still look the same. Ceramic tile covering, by Mosaic Tile Co., on both stairs and sides will never fade, stain, or discolor, needs very little cleaning and no maintenance.

Putting every inch to work

Unless planned well, closets can become Sargasso Seas of space-wasting clutter. See how handily these yield up their contents as well as store them

Like all the closets in the Pace Setter house, children's closet is also generous in its depth, so there is room on the inside of the door for a shoe rack. Because the children's clothes are short, two extension closet rods can make efficient use of all space.

The two double hat racks shown store a man's hats so they maintain their shape but do not waste any closet space. The three-tier shoe rack holds up to ten pairs of shoes. This eliminates groping in closet depths. All items here are "K-Veniences" by Knap & Vogt.

You see no tangles of tired neckties here. These ties rate a shallow cabinet of their own in the master dressing room. The racks, one for the bow ties, the other for the four-in-hands, hold 28 ties each and they swing out to make all 56 of them readily available.

ago and gradually improved and modified to suit American climatic conditions.

Radiant heating systems are practically identical with other systems of central heating in the way in which they "manufacture and distribute" heat. They differ only in the way heat is finally delivered to the room. For this reason, it has been possible successfully to apply most of the refinements in basic heating equipment (such as boilers, burners, circulators, valves, piping, and heating controls) which American manufacturers have been developing over the past 30 or 40 years to the radiant method of heat "delivery."

This method of heat delivery called panel heating because it uses relatively large, flat surfaces—all or parts of the floors, walls or ceilings—as heating panels that take the place of radiators, but in convectors, warm air inlets, and other visible heating devices. It is called radiant heating because such panels deliver a great deal of heat to the room in radiant form (heat that "jumps" from object to object, rather than that which is carried by air currents, in the same way heat from the sun jumps across empty space to the earth).

Flexible steel, zinc-coated "G-M Tubing" forms floor coils in concrete construction. Tubing on layer of insulating concrete will be buried in thin heating slab just under finished floor to speed heating effect. The coils have no joints in the entire run.

Most people, today, are aware of the advantages of radiant heating of houses built directly on the ground. The basic difference between radiant heating and convection heating (as the more conventional method is called) will bear repeating, if only because it has been so frequently overstated in the past. Radiant heating has been compared to skiing at Sun Valley or the effect of warm sunshine on a cool spring day. Such comparisons illustrate a principle, but they have little to do with the actual "feel" of a radiant heated house. Radiant-heated rooms feel much like other rooms, most of the time, and very little different at any time. What difference there is does not register as a sensation, but in the lower temperature at which true comfort heating. The extent of this difference is normally not great, and obviously depends on how hard the heating plant is working, since, if it is not working at all, there can be no such difference.

Look what happens in very cold weather. The radiant heating plant is working full tilt. Walls, floor, ceiling, furniture—and you—are heated several degrees warmer than the air is inside the house. Any other time of the year you will be cold with that inside air temperature. You'd be losing heat. But now you're comfortable.

Since with convection heating the opposite occurs (owing to the walls and windows becoming colder as the weather grows more severe), the comfort temperature of a radiant-heated house in ve-

Panel of Minneapolis-Honeywell controls in heater room provides for basic adjustments of dual heating system. Box at right permits adjustment of heating in concrete floors; small box, upper left, adjusts temperature for heating in wood frame construction.

—thermal equilibrium—is attained, especially in very cold weather.

Because more heat enters the rooms of radiant-heated houses in radiant form, the unheated portions of the walls, floors and ceilings tend to become warmer than with convection heating. Wall and ceiling surfaces, furniture and other objects become slightly warmer than the air—in the same way (although not to the same degree) as the body of a car left in the sun tends to get hot.

This effect, which is entirely absent with convection heating also raises the body temperature of the occupants, with the result that they are comfortable in air at a lower temperature than with convection cold weather may be as much five degrees below that of a similar house with convection heating. In the simplest, most practical terms this means that the colder it gets the more likely you are to appreciate the advantages of radiant heating. With convection heating, the colder it gets the more likely you are to become conscious of shortcomings.

The first two principles to remember about the Pace Setter heating system are these:

1. Radiant or panel heating is the only wholly invisible method of heating you can use. This is its greatest advantage.

2. Radiant heating works best as the weather gets colder. Most time, it is hard to tell from conventional heating. But in very cold weather it keeps you comfortable at a lower temperature, gives the a "fresher" feel, and it saves fuel.

But radiant heating is not the whole story of the Pace Setter heating system. The system is really a package. It includes the design of the house for climate control, since poor design from the climate constant standpoint might create problems no heating system could solve. It includes the construction, too, without adequate insulation throughout and double-glazed windows, the advantages gained from warm surfaces might easily be canceled.

MOST important of all was the engineering of the system to fit particular house design, proper sizing of the heating equipment, the provision of suitable automatic controls. Where such factors are not given sufficient consideration, radiant heating may be (and in fact often is) inferior to other methods. A radiant heating system is an integral part of the picture which cannot readily be modified after the house is finished. And because very little air-exchange takes place between the various rooms, or even between different parts of the same room with this type of heating, it must be engineered to supply precisely the correct amount of heat to all parts of the house at all times.

Experience has shown that with the commonest type of radiant heating (floor heating) two problems crop up which must be solved for good results. The first of these is that it is sometimes necessary to overheat the floors in order to get a sufficient quantity of heat into the rooms, or to underheat the rooms to prevent the floors from being too hot. The amount of heat which can be "delivered" to a room from the floor is limited by the floor area, and small rooms have less floor area, relative to their wall and window area, than large ones.
It is also limited by the fact that floors are made to stand on, and cannot be heated above a certain temperature (around 85°) without causing discomfort.

Housewives in floor-heated houses often complain that their feet become uncomfortably warm when working in front of the kitchen sink. Thus the floor "radiator" cannot be made larger, like most conventional heating devices, to supply a greater than normal heat demand, nor can it be made better, like wall and ceiling panels, to make up such a difference. The way this has worked out in practice is that large, open rooms without too much exposed wall and window area can usually be satisfactorily heated from the floor alone, but small corner rooms, and rooms with very large windows cannot.

The bedrooms of many floor-heated houses are inclined to be cool, and the bathrooms—especially corner bathrooms—downright cold, unless some form of supplementary heating has been provided. The master bedroom of the Pace Setter house is a good example of the kind of room that would be hard to heat properly by floor heating alone: It has three exposed walls and two large, floor-to-ceiling windows, and like most of the other rooms, loses some heat through the ceiling as well. If this room were heated exclusively by the floor, the floor would probably have to be made too warm for comfort, in really cold weather, to keep the rest of the room as warm as it should be. This brings us to a third principle:

3. If you want a really good heating system, do not rely entirely on floor heating, especially for the small rooms and rooms with big windows or several exposures.

Another kind of trouble which many people have had with floor heating is that their heating systems "lag behind the weather." Their houses are cold when the weather gets suddenly colder, and hot when it gets suddenly warmer; cool in the evenings when the outdoor temperature is falling, and warm in the mornings when it is rising. The reason for this is that most floor heating panels are very heavy. Heavy materials absorb more heat in the process of warming up than light materials, and hold heat longer—that is, take longer to cool, giving off more heat in the process.

A concrete heating panel resting on the ground may absorb all of the heat the heating plant can produce for several hours before becoming enough warmer than the room to supply much heat, and give off heat for several hours after the heating plant is shut off. This puts the ordinary thermostat trying to control such a system in the position of a general commanding army of tortoises. If it "calls for heat" (as the standard expression has it) at five in the afternoon on a mild day when the heating plant has been shut off from early morning, the call may not effectively be answered until seven or eight in the evening, and by this time the house may be uncomfortably cool, especially if the outdoor temperature has been dropping rapidly. The next morning the same sort of delay may occur in reverse: the thermostat may be completely "satisfied" by breakfast time. Yet the floor heating panels go on adding heat to the rooms until shortly before lunch.

To avoid this, the better floor heating systems have for some time been equipped with outdoor controllers which react to the first sign of a rise or fall in the outdoor temperature, without waiting, as an indoor thermostat must, for the house to become warmer or cooler inside. These controllers usually have the additional advantage of "modulating" the heat supply rather than turning it fully off or on—gradually throttling the heating effect as the outdoor temperature rises, and opening the throttle as it falls. This works well provided the house itself reacts slowly to temperature changes, giving the floor heating system a chance to catch up, as happens with houses of conventional design built with heavy materials like masonry. Even in the case of light frame houses with large windows, which respond more rapidly to changes in the weather, it still leaves something to be desired. The fourth principle is thus:

4. Be sure your heating system matches your house. A house which reacts quickly to changes in the weather needs a heating system capable of responding quickly to changed demands.

Since the Pace Setter house is of light-weight construction, and since it is also a solar house, it may be getting large quantities of solar heat at one moment when the sun is out, and none at all at the next when a cloud covers the sun. It was decided at the outset not to rely on a heavy floor panel as the sole source of heat. A heavy floor is ordinarily an asset to the solar house, since it tends to absorb the wanted sun heat when it is pouring in the windows and then to release it gradually by cooling after the sun goes down. But if the floor is already quite warm when the sun first comes in, its temperature soon rises to a point where the room becomes overheated, and most of the solar "gain" must be sacrificed by opening the windows. Ordinarily incompatible, floor heating and solar heating can be made to work together only if this conflict is taken into account in the design and controls of the heating system.

The way in which these problems were solved in the Pace Setter heating system is a good example of the "package approach" which takes into account the design and construction of the house and fits the equipment to it to produce the best over-all result. In addition to these more-or-less standard problems of contemporary design, the house presented a special problem of its own which had to be solved within the same "package." The problem was that part of the main floor was on the ground, of concrete slab construction; and part of it—the bedroom wing—was over a heated space and built of wood.

SUCH radical differences in construction pose a problem regardless of the type of heating used, since light-weight construction can be warmed much more quickly than heavy construction, even when the rate at which heat escapes from the building (and therefore the steady heat demand) is the same. With panel heating, it also raised the question of how to warm the floors in the bedroom wing, where there was no concrete slab in which to bury a hot water coil in the ordinary fashion.

This problem, and the problem of providing supplementary heating panels in the ceilings were solved in the same way. The spaces between the joists in the wooden floor and ceiling structures are used as heating "plenums." By heating the air within these spaces, the floors and ceilings are, in turn, warmed and made to give off heat. In this arrangement, the trapped air within the structure acts as a sort of "bucket brigade" to carry heat from prefabricated "finned coils" built into the space between the framing members, to the underside of the floor and the upper surface of the ceiling. None of this heated air enters the rooms; its

THE PACE SETTER LIVING-DINING ROOM FACES FACTS

Storage wall at end of living-dining room is faced with the same blond limba wood used throughout the house. Door fronts are handsomely ornamented with hand-wrought Chinese brass locks set on plates of aluminum. Curtains "bundle" into wall pocket.

This is the special part of storage wall that takes care of separate filing of table mats and napkins. Trays pull out for ease in setting table, can be taken to laundry for direct loading from ironer. Deep shelf above is for storage of extra-size pieces of silver.

Storage wall is planned for all categories of dining equipment. Mats and napkins store on removable tray-drawers. Compartments have rollers for storing extra-long cloths. Trays are "filed" on end. Upper shelves adjust to accommodate diverse sizes and shapes of silver. Third unit, not open, is for china storage.

Mobile serving cart is an indispensable party adjunct. Made of walnut, with white Micarta protecting all its vulnerable surfaces, it is a workable drink-mixing table. Slides and pull-up leaves increase serving space. Compartment for bottles is metal lined.

Same table is set up for serving buffet meal, its heat-resistant Micarta top unaffected by casseroles. Ball-bearing casters give it mobility. Removable trays can be used separately. With leaves lifted, it is a table for cozy twosome dinners.

E living-dining room, one large room so planned and furnished that it is two rooms, functionally and decoratively, owes its practicality and serene beauty to the flowing furnishings and materials specified by its designers:

"Tutch-latch" cabinet catch requires no knob or pull—useful when you don't want hardware to interrupt lines of wall-detailed cabinets. To open, push door; catch releases and door springs outward.

why I'm insisting on*

B & G Hydro-Flo* Heating

"There's not much sense in having large, modern windows, if the space around them can't be comfortably heated. So I'm insisting on B & G Hydro-Flo Heating, with either baseboard heating panels or radiant panels concealed in the floor or ceiling. I'll be sure then that every inch of our home will be livable . . . no cold down-drafts from windows . . . floors always warm."

No ceiling heat waste
All space livable—
no cold spots
Warm floors
Year 'round hot water
Low fuel cost

B & G Hydro-Flo Heating is a modern forced hot water radiant heating system. It adjusts itself automatically to every change in the weather . . . modulates the heat supply so that indoor temperature is always uniform, always comfortable. It is exceptionally economical in operation, since fuel is never burned needlessly.

Besides all this, the Water Heater of a B & G Hydro-Flo System provides a year 'round supply of low-cost hot water for all household uses.

Simple, dependable equipment

The basic units of B & G Hydro-Flo Heating are a Booster Pump to circulate hot water through the system—a Flo-Control Valve to prevent an over-ride in temperature—and a Water Heater which furnishes an inexhaustible supply of hot water.

B & G Hydro-Flo units can be installed on any hot water heating boiler—new or old.

Turning Necessities into Glamour

Here, behind the ivy and the glamour, we show you how this dressing room meets all one's needs and is really practical about it

This is how the master bedroom gets light through an inside wall. Vertical plastic panels are "windows" for diffused radiance from dressing room skylights. Door sliding from right insures privacy between rooms. "Lumarith" plastic has textured surface.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY RUDOLPH E. LEPPERT JR.

In building photo you see skylight "well" to radiate solar heat down in winter. It's cooled in summer by "Aklo" heat-reducing glass panels that shield outside of skylight and by attic fan's air wash on inside. Note fluorescent fixtures on north slope of ceiling.

See how necessities become glamorous in corridor off dressing room. Full-length "Evalast" plate glass mirrors provide 3-way viewing, conceal closet doors, create illusion of doubled space. Dressing-room details are simple but deft design needs no "decoration."

half the good things in the Pace Setter dressing room are unexpected. Only when you stop to study it do you realize, for instance, that its soft, filtered light is ideal for the dressing table. Or that its sleek surfaces of wood and glass conceal a host of drawers, shelves, and closets, each designed for a specific storage job. Or that it is the kind of room that will never nag you to be picked up or messed over.

Nothing was used there because it was merely pretty—it had to do the job first of all. And it had to do that job to suit the people who are going to live in it, dress and store their clothes in it. If necessities are thoughtfully provided for from the beginning, they need never be stumbling blocks to good design. In fact, ingenious solutions can create striking new design.

The Unifying Motif

The Pace Setter table setting shows what pleasing, cohesive personality you can give a room

by cueing all its details to one good design motif

Place mats, tableware, and centerpiece on page 204 spring from Mariska Karasz's embroidery "frozen" in the plastic living-dining room screen. Above, the motif embroidered on place mat (later plasticized). Right and below, the intricate-looking motif broken down into its simple components—a Cretan-stitched cone, rectangles in Ladder, Cretan, and Basket stitches. Centerpiece glass containers, "textured" with fruit and minerals, suggest stitched rectangles. Wine flasks repeat the cone. More about inspirational embroidery on pages 235 and 288.

creative table setting harmonizes tableware with furnishings, gives the room a stylish homogeneity of color and form. Its ingredients are:

Sterling flatware: "Hannah Hull" pattern, Tuthill Silver Co., Inc., North Attleboro, Mass.

China: Franciscan Fine China Co., "Encanto Nuevo" pattern, The McBean & Co., Los Angeles, Calif.

Glasses: Hemlock green "Flair" glasses designed by Russel Wright, American Glass Co., Bellaire, Ohio.

Place mats and laminated screen: Plastex United, Inc., New York.

Embroidery design, used in place mats and screen, Mariska Karasz, New York, N. Y.

Chair: Chateau Olivier by Julius R. Sons & Co., Inc., New York.

Furniture: "Hastings Square" walnut table and sideboard, and ebony chairs designed by William Pahlm, Grand Rapids Bookcase & Chair Company, Hastings, Mich.

Other upholstery: Eagle Otto London Glaze leather. Upholstery Leather Group, Tanners Council of America.

Glass fruit containers: Cambridge Glass Company, Cambridge, Ohio.

Wine flasks: used for wine, Peter and Amend, New York.

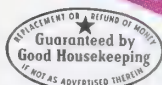

"Hannah Hull" sterling blends Early American design with modernity. Forks, spoons have tongued backs.

Dining-table drawer, fitted with a removable tray for storing or carrying flatware, lightens table-setting chores.

Ways to use the Pace Setter Embroideries

You can pick any one of the printed fabrics used in the Pace Setter house as a theme, and adapt the motifs to your creative embroideries

The fabrics on pages 234 and 235 were developed by F. Schumacher & Sons from original embroideries by Mariska Karasz. These art masterpieces were shown through the courtesy of the Bertha Schaefer Galleries. Their frames are from the House of Heydenryk. The fabrics they inspired give you a head start toward correlating your furnishings with creative embroidery. No matter which fabric you start with, there are hundreds of ways in which the design may be adapted. How you do it depends on the shape of the area you want to embroider and the use to which it will be put. You can work the motif closely all over the entire area or you can use a simplified version of it for a border. You can concentrate a cluster of motifs in a center or off-center arrangement or you can scatter them freely over the whole space.

But don't forget how the embroidered object will be used. On a place mat, for instance, the bulk of the design should be placed outside the area covered by dishes and flatware. On a lampshade the motif should not be so close as to interfere with the distribution of light.

"All Square," the printed denim shown on page 234, is easily adapted to a center design for either a circular or square shape.

Corner designs are good for rectangular place mats since they will not be hidden by the plates. All adaptations of "All Square" can be worked in couching, outline, and running stitches or may include other stitches to be shown in future issues.

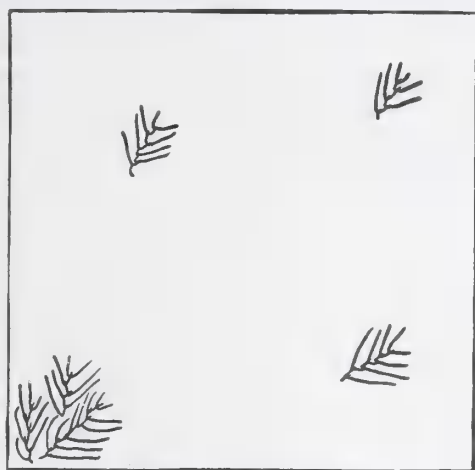

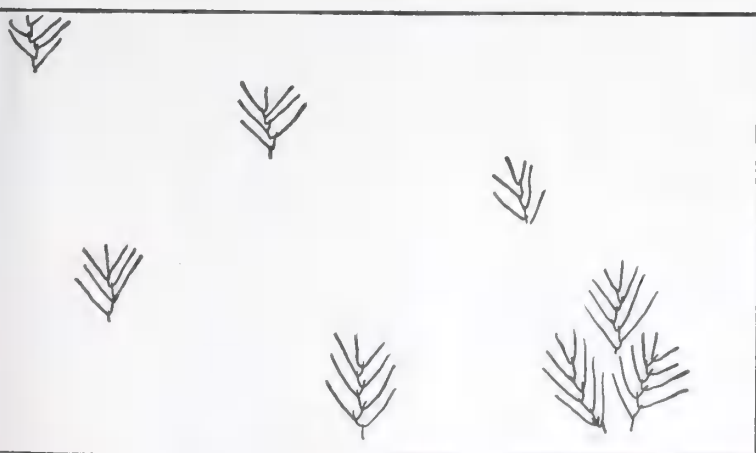

"Fancy Leaves," the pattern printed on the silk gauze curtaining on page 234, lends itself naturally to graceful off-center clusters or sprays.

Feather stitch—spine version

You can cover a lot of ground with a few stitches if you plan a design consisting of one small cluster plus a few strategically placed single motifs all running in the same direction.

Still another adaptation of the leaf design breaks up a large area by scattering motifs all over it. All these designs are made with the "spine" version of the feather stitch.

heat control

where you want it

when you want it

That's living! And so easy to accomplish. Have a General Controls Day-Nite Thermostat installed in the "heat sensitive" part of your home. (That's the most used area on which you base the output of your heating plant.)

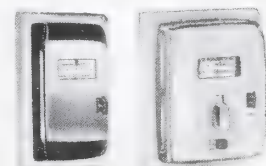

Then have your General Controls Day-Nite Electric Wall Clock Time Switch mounted on the wall of your bedroom or hall.

Set your Thermostat for the ideal daytime temperature you want and the minimum night temperature. Set your clock for the times you usually want daytime temperature to start.

It's magic! Nothing to touch or regulate again from day to day unless you want to get up earlier or later or "go to bed with the chickens." Then just change the time on your Day-Nite Clock as you retire—at the same time you set your alarm clock.

Timing control where you want it. Temperature control where you want it. And you save on the whole arrangement—by not wasting heat when you're sleeping—by not letting temperature drop to where it takes more fuel to bring it back.

General Controls heat control is inexpensive to install—money-saving in operation. Ask your heating dealer for further details.

As you go through pace-setting new houses keep an eye out for pace-setting materials. And for pace-setting ways of using them.

Look at the beautiful walls. At the smooth-working doors. At all the clever built-ins. Many of them — you find — *are made of Novoply**!

Look at the smart, new furniture. Some of the most interesting pieces feature the attractive wood mosaic texture of this newest among the new wood products.

Novoply is a sensational all-wood panel. Its amazing, smooth surface is built up of flakes of wood layered in interesting patterns as varied as leaves left swirled about by Autumn winds. Novoply is obtainable in either the friendly warmth of pine, or the glowing richness of redwood.

But not only in good looks is Novoply a brand new material. It is new in many practical ways as well!

It is strong. It is remarkably flat. It "works" easily with hand tools.

These advantages mean that Novoply is easily splined, mitered, mortised and tenoned. It can be drilled, bored, nailed, screwed.

And since its flatness is practically permanent, Novoply can be used to great advantage as doors. Especially sliding doors — for closets, cupboards and cabinets — doors that never warp or jam.

Novoply can be waxed, polished, painted or enameled. Its tough strength explains why it serves well as a base for plastic laminates and in many of 1952's newest pieces of furniture.

Sizes: 4' by 8' in  $\frac{3}{8}$ " thickness; many economical sizes in  $\frac{3}{4}$ " thickness from 30" by 60" up to 4' by 8'.

Novoply is pace-setting material for old houses as well as new. Many uses will suggest themselves when you inspect full-size panels. They're on display in 60 United States Plywood or U. S.-Mengel distributing warehouses in principal cities.

Or, if you prefer, see Novoply at your local dealer's; or send coupon for sample and literature.

A sliding door that cuts clatter and clutter

This new kind of sliding door "floats" out of its wall recess effortlessly and with a minimum of clatter. Study how it could save space in your house

Here's a sliding door that works with you. The sketch shows Dorflo scissors mechanism on which door is suspended without track or runner. Operation is thus easy and quiet. Use of a sliding door can often save several costly square feet.

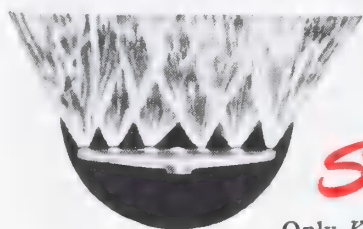

Remember the shaving mirror Grandfather had, the one that could be pulled out on a scissors principle? That's the way this sliding door works. It has no tracks or runners to jam or clatter. Instead, it is hung on a large scissors mechanism in the wall recess. When you move it in or out, it seems to float under the lightest pressure. It takes no more space than ordinary sliding doors and is easily removed. Dorflo Manufacturing Corporation makes both the wall section and the door hanger, which come pre-assembled.

But, you ask, how about the economics of a sliding door? True, it does cost more. But consider what a swinging door costs you: If it's awkwardly placed, it can interfere with other doors, make a traffic bottleneck, and annoy you every day in the year; if it robs you of floor space, at $15 per square foot, it may cost you $100 or more. That is why five sliding doors were used in the Pace Setter house, for a gain of 35 square feet of usable floor space.

Yes, KitchenAid is amazingly easy to operate. The front opening door and independently sliding racks mean you load and unload tableware the easiest way. No racks to lift out . . . no "long reaching" . . . no maneuvering! You just load it . . . latch the door . . . press the switch . . . leave it.

So Efficient...

Only KitchenAid has Hobart revolving wash and rinse . . . the powerful, complete action that literally scrubs tableware . . . the "working water" action pioneered and used in large Hobart commercial dishwashers for hotels, restaurants and hospitals.

So Clean...

Your tableware is washed, rinsed and dried immaculately clean. Circulated electric hot air drying is so thorough even stemware is dried without unsightly "tear drops."

DON'T WALK! . . . TALK!

PHOTOGRAPH BY WILLIAM HOWLAND

Dial on Dalmo-Victor master unit lets you select any one of ten stations to call. Then you press talk-listen switch (lower right of speaker grille) to talk over system. The cord at left is the power supply; cord at right is for hook-up to other stations.

the maid in the kitchen. You can answer the front or kitchen door without getting out of bed. And you can hear a child's lightest cry at night, even though his room may be at the other end of the house.

Yet the system is so inconspicuous you are seldom aware of it. The largest of its units is no bigger than a desk phone; it's easy to keep within reach without getting in your way. Other units are mounted unobtrusively in the walls and blend with them. All are sensitive enough to pick up sounds the length of a room, thus permitting their placement where it's most convenient for you.

Installation, especially in a house under construction, is simple. And it's a lot cheaper than you would probably think. The units used in the Dalmo-Victor system in the Pace Setter house range from $10 to $47.50. Installation costs vary widely, of course. They depend on the complexity of the system, local labor, and the type and stage of house construction. But it is possible to install a five-station system in a house under construction for about $150.

How do you plan such a system? First you figure where in the house this step-saving system will be most useful. The kitchen is always the busiest room. And when your floor plan is like that of the Pace Setter house, you will want to be able to make and receive calls or answer either door from the privacy of your master bedroom.

These two central points are called in the intercom language master stations. They are connected to all other stations in the system. They are much like a telephone switchboard in the way they receive and select calls. If you did not have them, everybody could be talking at once, and there'd be no privacy for anyone.

The other stations in the system are called remote stations. As the name suggests, they are out of voice range from the master stations to which they are connected. Note: They communicate only with master stations, not with other remote stations.

Now let's take some examples of how the intercom system will save you steps in a long, rambling house:

You are resting in the master bedroom when you hear the front door chimes. No need to rise, walk half the length of the house and answer the door. You have only two fingertip operations to make.

First, turn the dial on the master unit at your bedside to the number that connects your station with the remote station at the front door. Second, push down the "talk-listen" switch on your unit and speak to your caller. That's all there is to it. You've answered the door. After the caller has identified himself to you, you need not go to the door if you don't want to receive him.

turn the dial to a stand-by position and privacy is restored to your bedroom.

This hook-up is a relatively simple one. But here's one that's more complicated and at the same time more flexible:

At night and the children are sleeping in their room. The maid is in the kitchen and has set the lights in their bedroom and the children so she can listen to them. The same "night nurse" connection can, of course, be made to the master bedroom or to the child's room for monitoring the nursery.)

MEANWHILE you have guests in the family entertainment room downstairs and you need the maid's services. Your remote station there has been in the "off" or "do not disturb" position for privacy. You switch the unit on and use its "call-in" device to speak to the maid in the kitchen. Yet you do not disturb the children. When they are through, you switch off the unit again.

As you may have suspected from these two examples, there is a difference between remote stations. The one at the front door, as well as the one at the kitchen door and the maid's room, is called a non-private remote. That's the room engineer's way of saying that this station is always open whenever a master station wants to call it. The need for such a unit at the entry doors is obvious. In the maid's room the non-private remote unit has been wired in parallel to the master unit in the kitchen. That means all calls coming into the kitchen can also be heard in the maid's room.

The other type of remote station is as you'd expect, called a private remote. You can switch it off if you don't want someone at a master station to listen to you. Private remote units also have a "call-in" feature that lets you call a master station, even if it is not connected with you at the moment. You have seen how valuable this type of unit is in the family entertainment room downstairs. The same unit is in the children's bedroom.

You can compare the Dalmo-Victor intercom system to that of a telephone, but only so far. For two persons cannot both talk and listen at the same time as they do on a telephone. That's why there is a talk-listen switch, to direct the one-way voice traffic. Press the switch on the master unit and you can talk while the other person listens. Release it and he can then talk to you while you listen. Another difference between the systems, as you have seen, is that you cannot call all stations from each station.

The master units used in the Pace Setter house can each be connected to as many as ten stations. But if you needed a more elaborate system, you could have 20-station master units. You might want several remote stations outdoors—in the garage and workshop, on the terrace, in a studio, at a pool. Incidentally, these remote units are so sensitive you can use them as listening posts for prowlers at night.

The master units have a switch at the back like the one on your radio. It combines both "on-off" and volume control for the system. These units plug into both the 110-volt power supply and into the wiring hook-up for the system. Thus they are interchangeable and easily replaced for servicing.

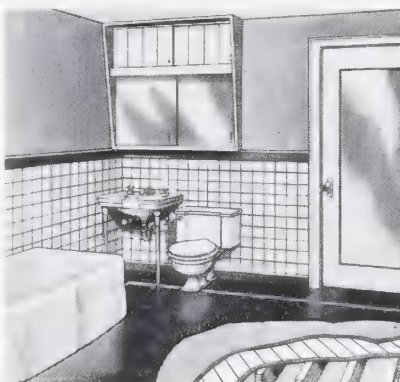

Dalmo-Victor's system operates on either alternating or direct current. It is rated at 24 watts. That means it consumes at most about a dollar's worth of current monthly. But in a house like the Pace Setter, where there are several major electric appliances, the cost is nearer 50 cents monthly. This is of course for 24-hour operation for which it is Underwriter-approved.

IT'S WORTH THE TROUBLE TO EXPLOIT THE BEAUTY IN ROCKS

This was just another big rock until all of its crevices were thoroughly cleaned, a tedious, delicate operation (uses only water pressure; rock must not be scarred by scraping). Result is a new richness of detail emphasized by play of light and shadows.

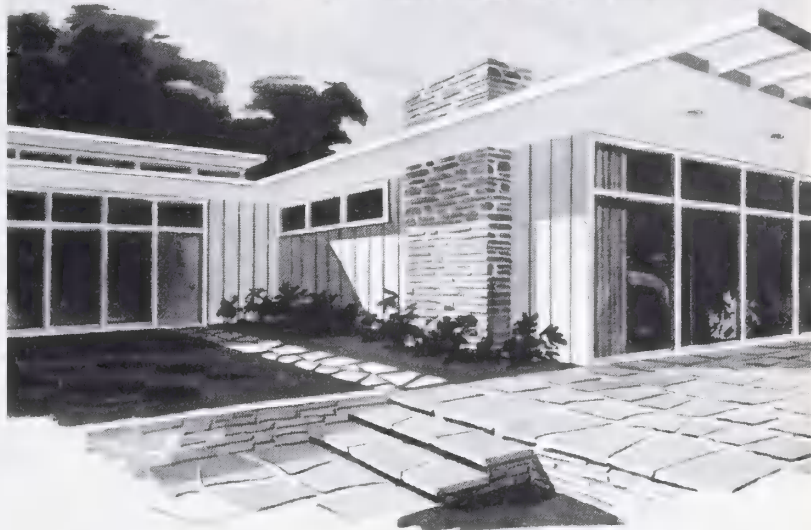

Man-made steps here join a natural ledge, but junction looks natural because stones in steps are of the same type and color. Steps are nearly at right angles to the ledge.

Rocks sometimes are squeezed into ridges like these, but until all the soil is washed away the beauty is lost. Too often we merely plant these pockets; instead, try exposing the rocks.

REALLY DE LUXE HEATING PLANT

only function is to warm the reverse side of the room surface.

THIS portion of the system, being light in weight, provides relatively quick heat in all of the rooms and is the sole source of heat in the bedroom wing—a fortunate but not unintentional arrangement which makes it possible to allow the bedrooms to cool considerably more at night than the balance of the house with its heavier floor construction, and to warm them more quickly on cold mornings. Under the control of indoor "averaging" thermostats near opposite ends of the house, it has the responsibility for maintaining exactly the desired temperature in all of the rooms while leaving much of the "heavy work" of heating the big living-dining area, the study, kitchen, and maid's room to the main floor system.

This part of the system, consisting of heating coils built into the concrete floors, is specially constructed to minimize the weight of the heating panels and increase their responsiveness to control. The floor structure itself is that of a club sandwich, beginning with the structural concrete slab, followed by a layer of waterproofing and two inches of insulating concrete. The sinuous hot water coils which heat the floors are placed on top of this layer of insulation, and embedded in a thin layer of concrete which supports the finish floors. This has the effect of isolating the heating slab from the more massive structural slab and the earth under the house, and reducing its weight so that it heats up and cools off more readily. In order to achieve a uniform floor temperature throughout the rooms, the pipe coils are spaced closely together around the edges of the building and farther and farther apart as they approach centers of rooms, where the need for heat is less.

This part of the system is controlled by an outdoor controller and mixing valve which raises the temperature of the water circulating through the coils as the outdoor temperature goes down, and lowers it as the outdoor temperature rises.

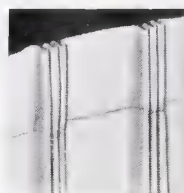

In mild winter weather, the water entering the concrete floor panels is only slightly above room temperature, and does little more than prevent the floor surface from feeling cold to the touch. Any sudden demand for heat, in such weather, is taken care of by the more responsive ceiling panels.

In extremely cold weather, when the total amount of heat needed is much greater, water enters the floor panels at about 95°, passing first around the outer edges of the rooms and cooling gradually as it approaches the center of the building and returns to the heating plant. On the north side of the house, the circulation of water in the floor coils is constant whenever the outdoor temperature is below 60°. On the south side, it is interrupted whenever sunshine is heating the rooms, regardless of the outdoor temperature.

The contribution of this part of the system is comparable to that of the plodding assistant to the brilliant impresario; it does most of the work and gets little of the credit. It cannot overheat the house in mild, changeable weather, because in such weather it is turned off altogether or barely functioning. Any tendency it may have to lag behind sudden changes in outdoor temperature is taken care of by the more responsive ceiling system, and this tendency is considerably reduced by the special construction of the floor, which permits it to warm and cool readily as the amount of heat being pumped into varies with outside temperature.

WHEN the house is to be unoccupied for several days or more, the ceiling system can be turned off entirely (by simply lowering the thermostat setting in the master dressing room), and the floor system will go on functioning, keeping the temperature of the living room-kitchen end of the house somewhere between 50° and 60°, and that of the bedroom end well above freezing, so that the whole house can be warmed up quickly when the owners return. Most of the time, it is impossible to tell whether it is working at all except by consulting the thermometer in the heater room which shows the temperature of the water entering the concrete panels.

The type of control used with the concrete floor panels is known as a "modulating outdoor controller." The control used for the ceiling panels and the floor panels in the bedroom wing is also modulating; that is, it varies the temperature of the heating water in accordance with the weather so that hotter water circulates through the panels as the outdoor temperature goes down. This control smooths out the hills and valleys of indoor temperature and virtually elimi-

IT'S WORTH THE TROUBLE TO

Stone walls at the Pace Setter owe much of their beauty to the initial careful sorting of rocks by color and graining. Size of stones matches that of fireplace wall in living room so garden and house continue the same coloring and scale.

Rather than cut the stones to regular sizes, or to fill the irregular areas with small stones, planting pockets of soil take up the spaces. Plants are dwarf types that won't exceed step height, don't detract from the crispness of the step line.

Rock gardens don't have to be the usual catch-all of tender little alpine plants. Here fine dwarf evergreen shrubs, scaled to the size and texture of the rocks, enhance rock beauty, make them important features instead of mere background.

You've heard about kitchen work centers. Now we give you a work-saver center, which fits into hall or utility room 8' long x 27" wide. Our work-saver center consists of washer, dryer, and 8-cu.-ft. freezer made by Universal Major Appliance Co. Freezer holds about 280 lbs. of food. Automatic washer has gyrating agitator basket of Fiberglas, which cannot rust or chip. Washes full load of clothes in 27½ minutes, uses 13 gallons of water. Electric dryer is equipped with "Sun-Sweet" element for sunlight action on clothes.

Homemade bread is not one of your specialties? Just the same, this Kelvinator range deserves your attention. You could fill the big oven with ten loaves of bread. But more likely you'll fill it with hamburgers, franks, or some other grilled dish for the hungry crowd home from school for the holidays. Oven is so big, you can cook a lot at one time, yet range takes up only a small floor space. If you have a spot 30" wide by 24½" deep, it will fit. Has built-in automatic clock, oven control, seven heating speeds, and four burners.

PACE SETTER EMBROIDERIES

You can also adapt the motifs of the translucent screen in the Pace Setter living room (page 205) to your own embroideries. Here is a casual arrangement within a circle of a one-stitch motif. Instructions will be given in a future issue of HOUSE BEAUTIFUL.

The Cretan stitch

The same stitch used in the circle above, plus the Cretan stitch and the ladder stitch may be combined to form a center medallion.

The ladder stitch

Here is a larger variation of the screen design which uses the same three stitches as those in the square above. You might work out a design of this type for a large rectangular area such as the top of a bedspread or a table top to be covered with glass.

NEW JOBS FOR AN OLD GARAGE

THIS old garage had shirked its duties for many a year. It was built in the era midway between the horse and the car. It was remote from the house, like its ancestor the carriage house. It was hard to get into; hard to use, once inside.

But it was sturdy and roomy. So it was well worth modernizing for the role it had to play with the Pace Setter house. The first step was to make it easier for cars to get in and out. Two sets of swing doors had been adequate for the narrower cars of 30 years ago, but they were a nuisance and a hazard today. So they were replaced by a single 16-foot wide door. However, the pattern of the new door repeats the motifs used on the old. For all its size, the new door lifts easily. Also available with it, if desired, are a motor to lift it and an electronic device by which you can operate the door while approaching in your car.

Now that two cars could enter the garage, another problem came up. The second car could get completely in because of a stairway to the attic. The solution was to install a folding stairway. It disappears when not wanted, can be lowered in a moment.

But today's garage must do more than just shelter a car. Here it houses the home freezer and garden equipment and material while the attic stores miscellany.

The last step was to bring the garage "closer" to the house. To an "eyebrow" was built across the front of the garage to shelter the entrance and to repeat the line of the overhanging eaves of the house. Then a breezeway, well-paved and lighted, was built between garage and kitchen door. Now the garage is almost like another room.

Today's garage must, above all, be accessible. Note how easy it is to get into the Pace Setter house garage through this 16-foot wide door, and how the breezeway to the house is sheltered and lighted for use in all weather. New door is by Overhead Door Corporation.

Two-car garage now, but it was not always thus. Attic stairway in old garage prevented parking a car like this. Disappearing stairway, seen folded up in ceiling, frees this space.

nates the "on-off" effect of ordinary thermostatic control.

As a final check on this part of the system, however, highly sensitive electronic thermostats are used to start and stop the circulator which pumps the heating water through the coils in the wood construction. As in the case of the concrete floor panels, circulation is stopped altogether in the south "zone" when solar gain is at a maximum, to prevent overheating of this side of the house and chilling of the north side.

The water temperature in this part of the system is at all times a good deal higher than that circulated in the concrete floors, because of the indirect method used for transferring the heat to the final surface of the heating panels. In the detailed layout of the piping, advantage was taken of this fact to provide extra heat for the foyer floor, and for a narrow strip beneath the floor-to-ceiling windows, by passing water returning to the heater room from the ceiling panels through the floor at these points.

This feature of the system, which cost virtually nothing since such return piping would have been necessary in any event, is a typical refinement of the engineering which, by providing heat in just the right places, has made it practically imperceptible throughout the house.

These details yield two more points-to-remember about the Pace Setter heating system and heating in general. They are:

5. Good engineering can put the large, low temperature heating surfaces used in panel heating at points where the heat demand is greatest, eliminating cold spots and increasing the useful floor area of your house.

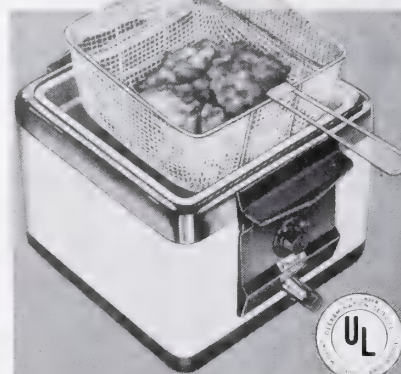

6. No heating system can be better than its controls. With radiant heating the controls, like all other aspects of the engineering, require expert understanding of the relationship between the heating system and the house design, and the particular panel construction used.

The balance of the Pace Setter system is similar in most respects to any modern forced-circulation hot-water heating plant. The boiler is gas-fired; domestic hot water is supplied by two separate automatic water heaters, one in the heater room, near the family bathrooms, the other in the kitchen-laundry area. Heating coils in the concrete slab are flexible steel tubing; prefabricated finned coils in wood construction are copper or aluminum. Heat supply to the various rooms has been permanently "balanced" by adjustment of a series of key valves, one for each of the coils, located in the heater room.

The master thermostat is equipped with an electric circuit which automatically resets the door thermostats for night control at a predetermined time and resets the control point at a predetermined hour in the morning; control of the south zone is vested in a separate thermostat which turns off the heat on the south side of the house whenever the temperature goes to the comfort point. The boiler is arranged with safety controls to shut itself off in the event of gas failure or if the heating water is heated above the boiling point.

The entire system requires considerably less attention than a garage, and costs about the same to operate. Which is very little to pay for the kind of winter comfort and absence of heating troubles and responsibilities it affords.

Following is a list of the heating equipment used in the Pace Setter house to meet the six key requirements for a balanced system.

Incredibly enough, you will seldom find more than two or three fellow-Americans taking advantage of this. Grenada, even on a budget, still leaves you plenty with which to buy fine British cashmeres and woollens as well as typical West Indies souvenirs, like woven palm and straw baskets, handbags, et al., and all sorts of spices—nutmeg, mace, cloves, cinnamon, vanilla beans—which will seem more romantic when you use them because you've bought them in their native habitat. There's not a lot of sight-seeing, even on this historic island, but you will enjoy its uncluttered beaches: the famous Grand Anse, a mile or so down the coast from the Santa Maria and a very pleasant walk along the island's flowered roads, and the newer Morne Rouge, now under development, and only a short distance by car or boat.

superior skiing is less than a ten-minute drive away, on famous Mt. Norquay. Here a pleasant and well equipped Ski Lodge will welcome you, the latest in chair lifts will waft you upward, and there is a variety of slopes to take you down. If you prefer to concentrate on skiing, there are a number of out-lying lodges, some with powder snow almost at the door, all set in incredible scenery, and the sort of place where you'll find congenial souls around the vast fireplace of an evening. Such is Sunshine Lodge, 14 miles from Banff, a massive log chalet well above timber-line, with the surrounding peaks providing slopes up to 10,000 feet. Farther away is Temple Chalet, reached by caterpillar from Lake Louise Station and gloriously overlooking Ptarmigan Valley. Still farther, six miles by ski or snow-shoe from Temple, is Skoki, girt all around by well frosted mountains and snow-laden evergreens. Ask your travel agent, the Canadian Pacific Railroad, or write the Brewster Transport Co., Banff, Alberta. Rates, you will find, average $7.50 per day including meals.

Check into the great number of air and steamship specials focusing on the Coronation of Britain's Queen Elizabeth next June 2. Among the first announced (and selling out fast) are these:

Cunard's "Caronia," leaving New York May 4 for a 37-day cruise with stops at ports in the Mediterranean, Ireland, and Scotland, and arriving at Southampton May 30, where the ship will serve as hotel while you take in the goings-on in London, with transportation to and fro, and grandstand seats pre-arranged for you.

The Home Line's "Atlantic," now scheduled for three Coronation sailings from Quebec, the first in late April, the second and third in May, between them allowing you to choose the amount of touring on the Continent and in Britain you wish to do before the Main Event. And the same line's "S. S. Nassau," sailing from New York May 2 for 46 days and eleven ports in the Atlantic islands, North Africa, the Continent, and the British Isles. Your ship will anchor in the Thames to serve as your hotel during Coronation festivities.

HOW TO LEAVE HOME AND LIKE IT

considering skipping Miami Beach as a result, take heart. Even Florida's lushest resort and certainly one of its "must" sights, can be trimmed down to budget size. In fact, one Florida-wise budgeteer we know, far from skipping Miami, gives it two whole days out of a ten-day, all-Florida motor trip, and out of a total expenditure of $300, allots $82 for doing the town, including all indulgences.

His first tip: pick your season. Until December 1, summer rates may give you, for as little as $5, even an ocean-front hotel, with no extra charge for its turquoise pool, ocean breezes through your room, and the pleasant thought that the same, come peak season, would run at least $25. Between December 15 and January 15, prices rise somewhat; from then to mid-March they are at the above-mentioned peak. But, immediately thereafter, they commence to slide again, tobogganing eventually into the annual summer low. In addition, a bit of astute shopping away from the Beach proper will disclose hotels and motor courts any time at around $10 per night for two, and spots where good practical nourishment without the trimmings will cost no more than at home.

And what about those diversions typically, excitingly, and expensively Miami? Well, at pari-mutuel rates you may be able to afford a bit of horse or dog racing, and there's always jai-jalai, at which a fifty-cent bet on your favorite player gets you in on the act. And for nightlife, spots like Leon and Eddie's, the Vagabond Club, Clover Club, Beach Comber, and El Mamba, which serves a seven-course Spanish dinner (with drinks at 65¢ each except in peak season), will give you the feel of the thing for around $15 to $20 for two. And even on the Beach, novel spots like the Saxony's Ye Noshery (Kosher for Snack Bar) serves fabulous food for less than you might think.

All of which, says our budgeteer, adds up approximately as follows: gas for getting around, $2; regular meals, $10; lodging, $20; and indulgences, $50!

500 mph

Predictions are that in 1953 you may be able to shoot about the world by aviation's newest and fastest, the jetliner. You may. But your chances will still be limited. In this country, Douglas Aircraft and Boeing are busy with plans, and Lockheed foresees a jet plane that will carry 64 passengers 600 miles per hour at 35,000 feet. But actual use of jet-powered planes for regular passenger service is still exclusive to British air lines, and developing along the routes they normally cover. British Overseas Airways are already flying De Havilland Comets in regular service between London and Johannesburg and from London to Colombo, Ceylon. They are due, early in 1953, to initiate a similar service between London and Tokyo. By March, British European Airways should be flying the first of a fleet of Vickers Viscount Discoveries, prototype of the propeller-turbine jet airliner with which it made an historic experiment between London and Paris in 1950. It is to these you must look if you insist upon being among the first to do the latest. Otherwise, jet flying is still something comparatively far in your future.

Pearl of the Occident

Look again at the itinerary you've planned for Mexico this winter. Does it include Guadalajara? Although this lovely, mile-high Spanish Colonial city is capital of the rich state of Jalisco, and actually second only to Mexico City in population, it has not been a practical place to visit until tely. But today, Guadalajara is making a strong bid for your company. It is one of Mexico's most romantic cities, with a perennially ringtime climate. Delicate grille-work and baroque ornamentation rich its venerable churches and stately mansions. The mariachi singer, who originated here, strolls the streets at evening, and a proud people adhere to aristocratic traditions 400 years old. But with all Old-Mexico atmosphere, Guadalajara is rapidly becoming one of Mexico's most modern cities through an enthusiastic and intelligent building program. Today you can arrive at its fine airport, stay at a hotel with every convenience (including a waiter who speaks English) and will discover such unexpected touches as a Sears Roebuck store, and a restaurant which, though called the Copa de Oro, specializes in banana splits. All these comforts are housed in streamlined buildings representing the best in modern architecture.

Because of this nice blend of antiquity and modernity, Guadalajara is appearing on an increasing number of tours. It is also easy to visit on your own. It lies only 400 miles by highway, two hours by air, northwest of Mexico City. If you're driving, it is directly available by highway from Laredo or El Paso, and the highway from Mexico City is excellent and scenic. Incidentally, it's the center of an ideal area for leisurely investigating. Near by are a lake, a canyon, a waterfall, and such towns as Tequila, where the potent cactus drink comes from, and in Pedro Tlaquepapaque, noted for its pottery.

Christmas? It's colossal!

The poinsettias are already reaching for bungalow eaves out Southern California way, bursting everywhere into fiery clumps and hedges, casting a crimson shadow of the big event that's just ahead. In California, Christmas may not always follow the familiar pattern, but it is always a major production. Sunshine, palm tree, citrus grove are the setting. Old Mexico adds spice, and Hollywood sets the pace and provides the know-how.

The show starts there as elsewhere with a series of here-comes-Santa-Claus parades in late November and early December. But in California Santa blithely picks his transportation to suit his destination, arriving via stagecoach at El Centro, in the dry Imperial Valley, by boat at Newport Harbor (where movie folk moor their yachts), and in Hollywood, where he does it all over again nightly through most of December, in a $25,000 sleigh, complete with a movie prop snowstorm.

Things gather momentum all through December. You can, for instance, see the Christmas story dramatized in the Merrie England manner at San Diego's Old Globe Theatre, as Old Mexico celebrated it at the Padua Hills Theatre at Claremont, or in a more or less straight Biblical interpretation in the open bowl at Fullerton's Hillcrest Park.

And finally, as Christmas itself draws near, all Southern California blooms with lights and decorations. Even these, strung on 80-foot dodecans at Altadena, on the forest of oil derricks at Huntington Beach, will keep reminding you that this is Southern California, and who wants a white Christmas anyway? As for you, you'll drape a light wrap over one arm, though you probably won't need it, and go out to Beverly Hills, where competition among the movie stars living there produces decorations so lavish and so fantastic as to rival even childhood's most extravagant Christmas dream.

RUDOLPH EDWARD LEPPERT, JR.

Roof shingles being laid here are 16-inch Certigrade No. 1 Red Cedar. Every third course is doubled to create a pleasing shadow line. Sidewalls of Pace Setter house use these same shingles laid over Certigrade Undercoursing shingles for more insulation and durability. Double thickness also gives each course a heavier shadow, accenting horizontal lines of house.

halls, and children's room for its warmth, quietness, and resiliency. Deep-piled wall-to-wall carpeting was used only in adult leisure areas—the living-dining area and the master bedroom.

Though performance under varied use was a controlling principle in specifying these materials, good looks were not sacrificed. See, for instance, how handsomely tile combines with carpet to carry landscape colors through living room into garden, (pages 201, 214).

The one aspect in which the house departs completely from tradition is in its glass walls along the south or garden front. Because of the severe winters, this glass is of the double-sealed insulating type. Because of the hot summers, at least half of it must open for ventilation. Conditions like this imply movable sash—weatherproof and easy-to-operate. And to guarantee this, the architect specified the factory-fabricated aluminum and wood sash described on page 254.

Herewith is a complete list of the materials and equipment specified by Architect Henry Eggers for the Pace Setter house:

Entrance planting of Pace Setter emphasizes peace-and-ease tone of whole garden—loosely pruned (not sheared) dado of a dwarf, spreading Japanese yew, accented by 5-stem clump of gray birch. Latter is far more effective, all year, than any single tree.

This wonderful old dwarf juniper seems to have grown in this spot for years, yet it and the rocks had been set in place only one week when photographed. At base of pole in background is a Carolina rhododendron. Garden is off screened terrace (page 222).

GLASS CREATES A Friendly FOYER

The softly lustrous surface of Structural Corrugated glass glows a warm welcome into the entry hall from this handsomely appointed living room. The interplay of light and shadow against the rhythmic pattern of the glass adds drama to the decor... creates a feeling of spaciousness and hospitality.

And this modern material is so practical. It floods interiors with soft, borrowed light that flatters furnishings, but protects privacy. Structural Corrugated glass creates partitions that are always new, easy to keep sparkling clean, never require painting.

Glass can bring new beauty to your home, add even more interest to your decorating schemes. Specify Mississippi Glass. Available in a wide variety of beautiful and unusual patterns wherever quality glass is sold.

Write Dept. H, today for free booklet, "Modernize Your Home With Decorative Glass." Photographs of actual installations. Many ideas on ways to use this exciting, new medium.

FEATURE A FEW FINE PLANTS

New variegated ajuga is ideally colored for this modern rock garden. This is close-up of base step you see in background of serpentine curve shown in color on page 216. Same plants would look out of place in regular garden.

This superb dwarf evergreen azalea, "Dalsimer," will be available next spring from its originator in various colors from apple blossom to red. Plant shown is 2½ feet across, only 18" high, which is nearly its mature size.

Bronze ajuga has fallen into disfavor because it grows so rampantly that it often quickly takes over a garden. Confined to a definite area, like this restricting soil pocket between steps, it rates as one of the finest garden plants.

Big news:

a fast-growing, deciduous

Deciduous honey locust will screen living and television-guest rooms from hot south and west sun in summer. (See page 214.) In winter bare branches let sun warm these rooms.

This is important reading if you have been thinking that it's impractical to plant shade trees because they take so long to mature. Your house, like the Pace Setter, needs shade trees and needs them in a hurry, there is now an easy solution. It is the quick-growing Moraine thornless honey locust, the fastest tree of them all, which, once established, grows from 3 feet to 5 feet a year, giving you full-edged shade within a few years of planting.

If you haven't yet got acquainted with the Moraine, here are some of its other attributes which you should know about:

It is an attractively shaped tree, somewhat reminiscent of the American elm, which is now unsafe to plant because of the prevalence of Dutch elm disease and phloem necrosis. The Moraine is not subject to any serious diseases. It is sturdy, not prone to storm damage like other rapid-growing trees, which have softer wood and more sharply angled branches. It's a clean, neat tree. Because it is sterile, it has no seeds that drop and require sweeping up; and because it is fairly drought-resistant and not likely to become diseased, its leaves (which consist of small leaflets) hang on all summer. It is entirely free of the thorns, which until now have kept the honey locust from being widely accepted as a shade tree. And, like all honey locusts, it is a superb lawn tree because its shadow filters enough light to foster excellent grass growth, yet creates shade to keep crab-grass from germinating.

A few deciduous Moraines can do for you just what they have done

PLUS VALUES IN HEATING

Here are two of the Pace Setter's supplementary heaters that will warm you quickly after bathing or on a chilly morning

NuTone's "Heat-a-lite" is an ingenious combination of heater, circulating fan, and ceiling light. Each is switched independently, but heater will not operate unless fan is on. There is no danger here in children's bathroom of accidental contact with heat. Chrome finish; output, 4,500 BTU.

Electromode's wall-type heater also has a fan for circulating warmth. In addition, it has a thermostatic control which may be set from 55 to 85 degrees. To prevent shocking, the resistor wire is buried in a finned aluminum casting. Automatic cut-off prevents overheating. Finish is chrome.

A FAST-GROWING, DECIDUOUS SHADE TREE

for the Pace Setter. They invite the soul, please the eye, and give the house a "settled" look. And, if they are strategically placed, they can perform indispensable climate-control functions. They can aid and abet the cooling of the house with their summer leafiness, and help heat the house in winter when the sun streams through their bare branches.

ON THE Pace Setter terrace four Moraines have been planted close together and in a definite pattern so that in time they will provide one big pool of shade on the terrace and an umbrella of foliage over the house in summer. And the house will enjoy these benefits much sooner than if one large tree had been planted to do the job. On the score of expense, too, the Moraines were chosen in place of one big tree, for four good reasons: (1) The terrace is so huge that only a very large, very expensive tree could furnish an adequate spread of shade. (2) The site is a rock ledge, so the cost of providing a soil pocket for one huge tree would come high. (3) Because of grading, present trees, and the placement of the house itself, the haulage of a great tree to the site would be as costly as it would be difficult. (4) Once planted, a big tree would need extensive bracing for several years on this windy hilltop site, for root space would of necessity have to be fairly shallow, rock removal costs being what they are. Moreover, unless the terrace tiling were broken into to provide cable anchorage, the bracing cables would have to be anchored off the terrace and the terrace completely spanned by unsightly cables.

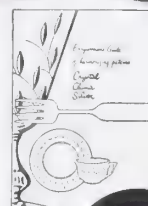

The Moraine honey locust is a patented tree, but it's available from any nursery. As trees go, it's a baby, having been on the market for only three years. (The oldest Moraine, the original seedling of the Siebenthaler Nursery of Dayton, Ohio, is only 15 years old.) But it is already such a favorite that nurserymen can't keep up with the demand. This means that most of the trees currently available to you are no more than one or two years old. But even at this tender age they stand from 6 to 10 feet high, so your pursuit of shade is off to a good start anyway.

Be sure to look for this famous trade-mark. Imported from England, this brass has an exclusive hand rubbed finish, lacquered to prevent tarnish. Requires no cleaning.

A study of the house plan on page 224 quickly explains why there are two cleaning closets in this Pace Setter house. In a long, rambling house you need two utility closets, located at widely separated points, to save steps and eliminate moving heavy things long distances. The cleaning closet shown above is just off the front hall, in the very middle of the house, adjacent to living-dining room, television-guest room, and bedroom wing. It uses the multi-purpose idea by providing storage for card table and games, too.

The specific cleaning problems involved at this end of the house determined the vacuum cleaner selected. They required a cleaner with the right attachments to clean the specific structural and decorative materials used. A felted floor duster takes care of cork and clay tile floors while a floor nozzle cleans wall-to-wall carpeting. To sheer curtains, a brush is attached to a 6-inch nozzle to keep the fabric from being drawn into the nozzle. Without the brush, this tool serves for heavy-duty draperies and holstered furniture, also for textured wall-coverings. For slatted shades, furniture surfaces, lamp shades and such, a soft dust brush disposes of any accumulated dust.

Picked-up dust is trapped in the metal base of the cleaner, emptied as easily as a wastebasket. No matter how much dust is picked up, it can get back into the house because of a special filter cone.

Another convenience in this long, rambling house is the wheeled dolly, which permits easy movement around of the cleaner, with a minimum of wear and tear on the different floor surfaces.

Cotoneaster evergreen casts its shadows on this big terrace-side rock, an inexpensive, always effective design idea easy to apply.

Planting pockets for the Moraine thornless honey locusts are 1/4 the size of terrace grid pattern, set in a corner of it, sedum-filled.

Eleven-foot grass circle in tile terrace helps cool it, repeats curves of serpentine steps. Tile divider strips intersect the circle.

Tree care is an expert's job

Expert care prolongs their life, adds to their beauty

Thorough spraying requires good equipment. There must be 600 pounds pressure at the nozzle to coat the leaves adequately without injuring them and sufficient power to propel the spray up to the top of the tree. Lower pressures rip and tear the leaves because the droplets are too large.

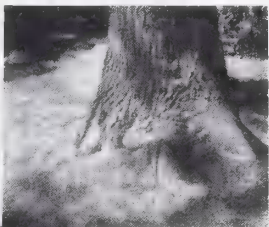

New mist-sprayer disperses spray chemicals into particles so small that they emerge as a cloud which envelops the leaves. It is especially useful for killing mosquitoes in parts of the property to be left as a wild garden. It requires a skilled operator and correct timing of spraying.

Mosquito control for comfortable evenings on the terrace is achieved by spraying all shrubs with DDT. Requires about 3 sprayings, at 2- to 3-week intervals, and only from the ground up to 15 feet. Mosquitoes seldom fly higher.

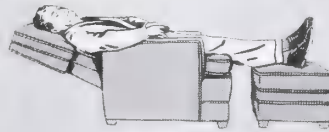

Repairing root damage is no job for self-styled "tree surgeons." Up on it depends future of tree. This Davey expert with 40 years' experience looks for hidden damage.

Tree feeding results in healthy, renewed growth, a richer green leaf color. It's one tree job you can do yourself. Tools needed: crowbar to punch foot-deep holes, can to pour Vigoro into holes, hose for final soaking.

MERE MAN and the meat-market sundries

The odd, rarely served cuts of meat are just your dish if you want to show off as a masterly cook

By Victor Bergeron

Known to some as "Trader Vic" and author of the new handbook for masculine cooks, The Kitchen Kibitzer, from which this series of articles is taken

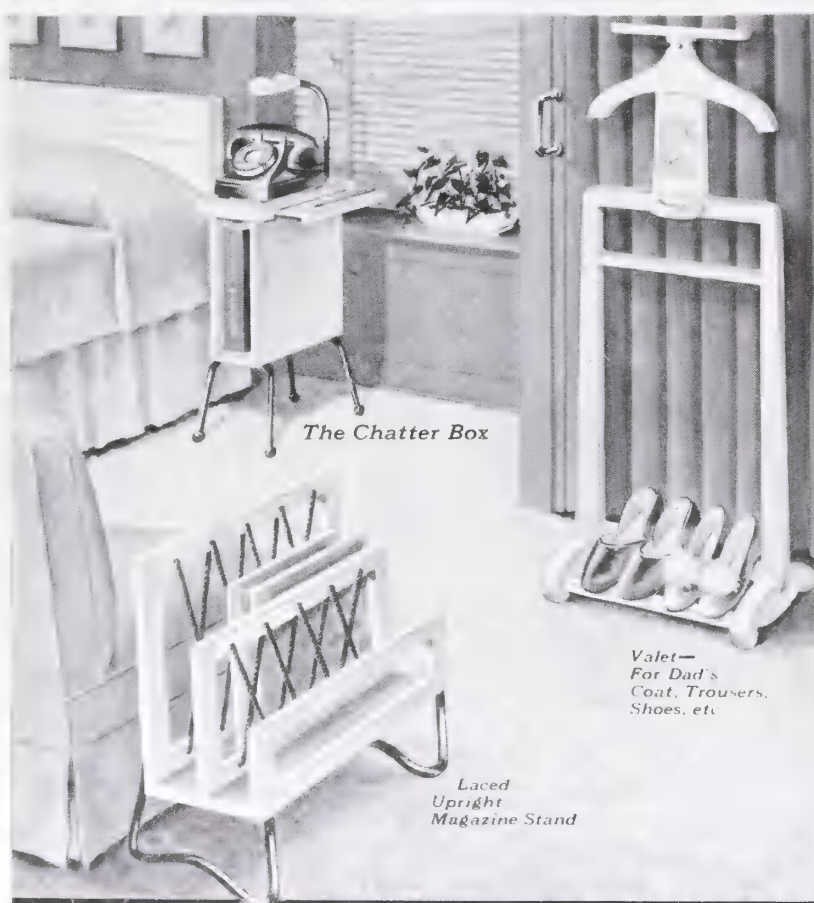

The Kitchen Kibitzer

Kitchen Kibitzers usually concentrate on barbecuing choice cuts of meat and tossing green salads with a favorite, carefully concocted salad dressing. Not only are the odds less on botching things, but the limelight of these two phases of dining appeals to the ham in most of us. While a few men graduate to more complicated processes of cooking, which require pots, pans, finesse, and a recipe, the results still must be spectacular, and odd cuts of meat are the answer. You have the field to yourself when you work out on oxtails, tripe, lamb cheeks, or lamb shanks. Can you imagine a woman serving any of these meats at a dinner party? Not my. Actually, how food tastes is that really matters. I've served oxtails to a gathering of friends right in my little beanery and never been turned down on turn engagement.

Oxtails

Let's start with a dozen oxtails, cut from lightweightimals. To be good they should be more than three inches at the butt and the fat should be visible. The larger, fatty tails are so succulent or full-flavored, that the tails at the joints, discard them, and roll the pieces in

Flour the lamb cheeks and brown in oil; add the chopped onion and parsley, and seasonings.
Add hot water, cover, and simmer gently, cooking about two hours, or until tender. About half to three quarters of an hour before the stew will be done, add the potatoes, onions, and carrots—scrubbed and peeled—the cooking time depending upon the size of the vegetables.
You can remove meat and vegetables to a heated platter and thicken the gravy, if you like, with flour and water. Season to taste.

Lamb Check Curry

2 pounds lamb cheeks
1 large onion, finely chopped
1 clove garlic, finely minced
3 large mushrooms, sliced
3 sprigs parsley, finely chopped
2 carrots, finely chopped
1 stalk celery, finely sliced
1 tablespoon curry powder
1 teaspoon MSG
¼ cup dry white wine
2 teaspoons A-1 sauce
1½ cups stock or hot water

Dredge cheeks in flour, brown in oil, and add vegetables and seasonings, wine and stock (or hot water), and cook gently until tender, about 2 to 2½ hours. Add more liquid if necessary, stirring frequently. Serve with rice.

Beef Stew: Young beef cheeks, cut in squares and made into beef stew, are far superior to the usual variety of stewing meat. There's more flavor and character to the meat, and no waste.

Jewish Fillet

Another cut of beef scarcely ever mentioned is nicknamed "Jewish Fillet." A long piece of meat, shaped exactly like the fillet of beef we all know so well, it is really a pot roast out of the top of the shoulder weighing about two pounds. The flavor is excellent, but there is considerable shrinkage, so cook at least 2 for 4 to 6 people. To prepare, flour your Jewish Fillets, brown them, and simmer with carrots, onions, a clove of garlic, and a bouquet

garni. Simmer in a heavy cast-iron, heavy-lidded pot until tender and you'll have good gravy and wonderful meat.

Mountain Oysters

If you know what they are, don't laugh. If you don't I'll tell you. They're those little doohickies that change the BAAS to baas, when removed from the lambs. They are known by several names—lamb fries, lamb's stones, or "lamb's secrets." They are obtainable only during the lambing season, have the texture of oysters and about the same flavor as a sweetbread, only better, and are considered by many, including me, to be a superb delicacy.

In case you are ever confronted by some mountain oysters, here's what you do. Skin and wash them, split them down the center, dredge them in flour, and fry gently in butter. Then add some finely chopped shallots and parsley during the last five minutes of cooking. Add a dash of sherry wine, salt and pepper, and just a touch of A-1 sauce. Thicken the gravy with a tablespoon of cornstarch, mixed in a little cold water. There won't be much gravy but it will be rich and full of flavor. I've noticed that doctors with a penchant for dabbling in the kitchen seem to take particular delight in preparing this little number for unsuspecting guests and telling them about it afterwards. It may be a little disconcerting to the uninitiated, but sheer ambrosia to the habitués.

Lamb's Tongue With Sweetbreads

You'll have to give your butcher advance notice for lamb's tongues as few carry them these days. To me they are far better than the large and chewy beef tongue, but it takes more of them for a meal. Figure it out for yourself—one tongue to a lamb. When you get them home, remove the loose ends and superfluous tissue, and boil them just long enough to loosen the thick, leathery coating. Skin this off and simmer the tongue in a tomato sauce made of canned solid pack tomatoes, a clove of garlic, an onion or two, thinly sliced, a small piece of bay leaf, one or two carrots cut up, and a stalk or two of celery with the tops left on. Add a bit of pepper, salt, and freshly ground pepper. Half an hour before tongues are done, add the breads prepared as for O. These can be omitted but really polish off the dish. Gravy can be thickened or as you wish.

Serve with boiled rice, a salad, and French bread. the bread, sliced lengthwise rub it with garlic, and toast if you like. Personally, good French bread is good enough me as it comes from the oven plenty of butter, without an extra goop on it. Have plenty of red wine on tap and call me I'll be right over.

Lamb shanks

You can do a lot with shanks. Maybe they sound so but, man, they're just plain. One easy way to fix them is to them—well, simmer them—onion, celery, parsley, carrots, some rice, barley, or potatoes. Other words, make a thick soup of them and serve the shanks on the side. With fresh bread and butter for soppings and a salad you've a meal fit for food lover.

Another way is to brown one to a customer, then skin them with canned tomatoes, or a little garlic and bay leaf, and pepper. But my favorite is with little white navy beans.

Lamb Shanks With Beans

- 4 lamb shanks
1 large clove garlic, finely chopped
1 large onion, sliced
2 stalks celery, finely sliced
2 tablespoons parsley, finely chopped
2 cups solid pack tomatoes
1 teaspoon salt
1/4 teaspoon pepper
2 cups tiny white navy beans

Wash beans, pick over, and on guard for bits of gravel pebbles resembling beans—yep, be a candidate for the dental chair. In a large heavy kettle sauté the chopped garlic and onion, add the celery, carrots, parsnips, tomatoes, and salt and pepper, add the beans and hot water to cover. Cover with a heavy lid and simmer about an hour and a half, adding more water, stock, or tomato juice, as necessary. Brown lamb shanks and add to the beans. Cover and simmer until meat is tender. If you have the remains of Sunday's leg of lamb in the icebox, the bones can be simmered with the beans for the first hour and a half and removed when the shanks are added. The more flavor the better.

Lamb Hearts

Hearts are another forgotten mealtime treat and there's nothing better, stuffed and baked with red wine. Figure one heart to a person—sounds reasonable—and make a stuffing as follows:

- 1 cup bread crumbs
- 1/4 cup finely chopped onion
- 1/4 teaspoon poultry seasoning
- 2 tablespoons chopped parsley
- Salt and pepper to taste
- 2 tablespoons melted butter

Wash hearts thoroughly and cut out veins. Stuff and sew up or skewer openings together. Brown thoroughly in butter and oil in a Dutch oven, add some cut-up carrots, celery, and onion, salt and pepper, and add 1/2 cup of red wine. Let simmer slowly 2 1/2 to 3 hours, or until tender.

The other evening I was trying to decide what to have for dinner. After looking my menu over from stem to stern I finally decided on a kidney sauté. I happened to wander out into the kitchen and saw the chef cooking some sweet-breads, so I asked him to sauté a few for me, too, and add them to my kidney sauté. It was a fantastic dish.

Kidney Sauté With Sweetbreads

Remove the fat from the kidneys and slice them very thin. Flour the sliced kidneys and the cleaned sweetbreads and sauté them lightly in butter over a fast fire. Season with salt and pepper, add a pinch of finely chopped shallots and some sliced fresh mushrooms, sauté a few moments more, then add a little stock, some red wine, a dash of A-1 sauce, and let simmer for ten minutes. Thicken the gravy slightly and serve on hot toast.

A few nights later I tried frog legs with sweetbreads with equal success.

Frog Legs with Sweetbreads

Flour the cleaned sweetbreads and brown them lightly in butter over a fast fire and set them aside.
Then brown the frog legs in butter, add a good heavy pinch of chopped shallots, a handful of small mushrooms which have been previously sautéed in butter, a dash of A-1 sauce—just a dash—and a little chicken broth or stock. Return the sweetbreads to the pan and cover with white wine. Let this cook down until sauce is rich.

Of course, as I discuss this bit of gastronomical frippery my gal

MERE MAN

Friday says, "You'll give your readers the general idea that you like sweetbreads—you only have them in five or six other recipes." Well, by golly, I do like them, and I believe people who haven't tried them or have a phobia about them have got themselves all tangled up with sweetbreads of poor quality or poor cooking.

While we're discussing innards, let's go a little higher up on the animal and talk about brains. Now there's something that has been passed up too long. They're wonderful with scrambled eggs.

Scrambled Eggs with Brains

To prepare brains, wash in cold water, remove membranes, and parboil a few minutes in boiling water to which a little lemon juice and salt have been added, then drain and plunge into cold water. Cut in small pieces, fry very quickly in butter, and when they are firm and browned, add a teaspoon of fine small capers or powder lightly with a whisper of nutmeg and fold into a light fluffy omelet or into soft scrambled eggs.

Tripe, believe it or not, has uses other than swimming around in a Philadelphia pepperpot. One famous recipe—the variations are many but the general directions are always the same—has nothing to do with that famous San Francisco columnist, Herb Caen, author of Baghdad-by-the-Bay.

Tripe à la mode De Caen

- 2 pounds honeycomb tripe
- 1/4 pound salt pork
- 3 large carrots, thickly sliced
- 3 onions, sliced
- 3 stalks celery, diced
- 1 bell pepper, diced
- 1 tablespoon chopped parsley
- Beef marrow Pinch of thyme
- Pinch of marjoram
- 1 bay leaf
- 1 teaspoon salt
- Freshly ground pepper
- 1 calf's foot
- White wine Stock

Wash tripe in several changes of cold water and cut into strips about one inch by two inches. Line the bottom of a large bean pot with sliced salt pork, then alternate layers of vegetables, seasonings which have been combined, strips of tripe and pieces of the calf's foot and marrow until the pot is nearly full. Fill the pot up with equal parts stock and white wine, seal, and let bake in a slow oven eight to ten hours, adding more liquid if necessary.

BOOKS FOR GARDENERS

By Carol H. Woodward

Shielding the Garden

Elements of Plant Protection, Louis Pyenson, Wiley, New York 1951. 538 pages. $1.96.

For the gardener to understand the life histories of disease-producing fungi, insect pests, and animal predators among cultivated plants is to help him apply control measures more intelligently. It is interesting, too, to learn about the habits of moles, the amazing vitality of the simple little worm called a nematode, the effect of high and low temperatures on the life and death of insects, the ways of treating seeds for disease protection, the characteristic life histories of different types of weeds (summer annual, winter annual, biennial, perennial), and the newest ways of eradicating them with chemicals.

Plant protection involves shielding of crops and gardens from injurious insects, birds, mammal disease-producing organisms and factors (such as mineral deficiencies), and the ubiquitous weeds.

Sometimes a textbook has great value for the home gardener. This volume written expressly for him. Thus Dr. Pyenson's text Plant Protection should have application far beyond the local Island classroom where he teaches.

Success Story

Herbert H. Dow, Pioneer in Creative Chemistry, by Murray Campbell & Harrison Hatton, Appleton-Century-Crofts, New York, 1948. 168 pages. $3.50.

Behind the complicated substances which are in use today, eliminating weeds and spray fruit trees, there is a backlog of many years of experimental search. Only the manufacture of previously developed chemicals could have led to the production of the new sprays and dusts, just as they in turn will lead to still more efficient substances.

The story of the founder of a firm which has become a leading manufacturer of herbicides and other agricultural sprays, as well as plastics, is told in Herbert H. Dow, Pioneer in Creative Chemistry. It is a typical American success story, with dramatic moments aplenty along the course of their early ambitions, glimpses of their realization, disillusionment, determination, and final overwhelming success of this famous pioneer.

Added to Colonial beauty—new techniques, new fibres

Think of the housewives of 150 years ago, who bent over hand looms to make their own bedspreads. How amazed they would be to see modern machines, moving faster than the eye can follow, doing the work of a "thousand hands."

Take Morgan-Jones' lovely "Radiant Heiress," for example... inspired by the Colonial candlewick... but so vastly improved by 20th century precision and the interweaving of man-made fibres.

The thousands of bud-like tufts on this super-size bedspread are made of a special crimp fibre... lustrous, long-lasting, lint-free; and lovelier by far than any hand-spun cotton. The tufts are firmly woven in—not applied afterward, as was done by hand. The result is they are all evenly spaced, uniform in size and keep their fluffiness indefinitely.

You'll want to see the "Radiant

Heiress"—soon. Look for it at your favorite store in your choice of antique white, bleached white, pastels, and decorator colors.

PHOTOGRAPH BY LANDSHOFF

She's looking at a heat mirror. Drapery is lined with sateen, coated with "Milium"—a fabric that has thousands of shiny particles of aluminum attached to its surface. If radiant heat tries to escape from this room, "Milium's" reflective insulation bounces it back. Insulating glass in these broad windows is Thermopane.

with good heavy draperies, intelligently used, you break about even. The glassy house costs no more to heat than a less glassy house. In some parts of the U.S., where winter weather is exceptionally sunny, the glass may actually save you a little money. In other parts, where winters are especially cloudy, it may cost you a little extra. Neither the savings nor the extra expenses are big enough to matter. As far as the heating problem of Big Glass is concerned, there isn't any. But, remember, there isn't any only if your house fulfills two conditions:

1. The Big Glass must face south, so it can pick up heat while the sun shines.

2. You have to have those curtains. This house has special curtains, specially designed for the job of keeping the house warm. They are of regular drapery materials, selected for looks, color, texture. But they are lined with a new product: Milium. Milium is a heat-reflective fabric. It does to heat just what a mirror does to light. It feels, looks, drapes like an ordinary fabric. (It is sold mostly as lining for clothes—so it has to feel and act normal.) But tiny particles of aluminum are embedded between the fibers, and these act as heat mirrors. You can use Milium as lining for a raincoat and it will be as warm as if it were of some thick, heavy material. The metal mirrors throw your body heat right back at you. In the same way, when you line your draperies with Milium, they throw the room heat right back into the room, instead of letting it escape to the cool window.

All this may still leave you a little puzzled. Heat mirror? Reflective insulation? Huh? Well, actually it has long been known that there are two types of insulating materials: the familiar fluffy kind, and the shiny metallic kind. A shiny metallic surface bounces back any heat rays that try to "land" on it. This is not as unfamiliar as it sounds. If you take your vacuum bottle apart, for example, you will find no fluffy insulation, but only two shiny metallic surfaces, facing each other across an open space. Heat can't get across.

Other examples of "reflective" insulation: the shiny aluminum roofs that you see increasingly on the farms. The roof bounces the sun heat right back, and the barn stays cool. Or the shiny ice-bucket. To get the feel of that, just try to bring your finger slowly closer and closer to the coffee-maker when it is hot. You will feel almost no warning heat radiation. But when you finally actually touch it—ouch!

For that matter, "reflective" insulation is hidden right in the walls of this very house. The architect used a product, Kimsul, that is sort of double-barreled insulation. It is the familiar fluffy type of insulation, faced with an outer cover of reflective aluminum foil, shiny side out. This shiny facing has about the same effect as doubling the thickness of the fluffy stuff would have.

And now the reflective-insulation idea has hit the drapery field. As an idea, heat-reflective curtains are old. Most every student of heating and comfort, including the Editor, has long wanted them. The trouble was, up till now, that no practical heat-reflective material was available. All you could buy was a sort of metallic cloth, silvery-looking, that was sold by theatrical supply houses (fairly queens and such needed the stuff). It just happened to be heat-reflective. It would soon tarnish and lose its power. But now, with Milium lining, ordinary drapery material takes on the insulating power of a quilt. This is a big asset in the modern house. It means there's now less reason than ever to be afraid of Big Glass, in any climate.

THAT the ceilings of this house have insulation goes really without saying. But the insulation underneath the house deserves your attention, because here you come back to basic characteristics of the modern house. This house sits on a concrete slab (heated in winter) instead of a cellar. More and more houses do. The advantages are great: The building dollar goes into building above-ground space, which is class-A space, instead of a basement, which is at best class-B. You get rid of wet cellars, damp, smelly ones, dirty ones. There is a rule—like all rules, it has exceptions—that anything a basement can do for you an above-ground room can do better and cheaper.

"But isn't it cold?" In a really cold climate, don't you need a cellar to keep the cold from creeping up into the house? The answer to that has become quite clear in recent years. It's this: The concrete slab is all right in any American climate, but in the colder ones it must be insulated. This is not to

Electrical Protection and END the Blown Fuse Nuisance

Why tolerate the blown fuse nuisance in your new home? Why hunt fuses in the dark... or break off in the midst of preparing a meal to go to the store for the new fuses you forgot to buy? Why stumble down dark cellar stairs and fumble in the old fuse-box wondering what to do? The Cutler-Hammer Multi-Breaker ends this annoyance forever. It is installed in the kitchen or any other convenient place. And when service goes off, all you do is reset a tiny lever that has snapped out of position. Nothing to buy... nothing to replace! Service is restored in the twinkling of an eye... even by a child! The average new home can have this modern and safe protection for very little additional cost. Also easily installed in old homes. What are all the facts? Write today for our free booklet "Goodbye to Fuses." CUTLER-HAMMER, Inc., Pioneer Electrical Manufacturers, 1398 St. Paul Ave., Milwaukee 1, Wisconsin.

avoid discomfort. The heating the concrete slab takes care of the angle. But it is to keep heat from flowing from the heated slab in the wintry ground in which it sits. The heat that goes down is not lost. It warms the underground, and presently, the house gets the benefits of it after all. The serious loss is what goes out sideways. When concrete slabs were still new, somebody once took an air photograph of a housing development that became famous in building circles. It was February, and nothing was green yet. But each house was sitting in a patch of green lawn. Each house had heated the earth around it so much that it had actually speeded up the spring! That, of course, had cost each householder plenty.

So, by now, insulation against sideways heat loss is standard practice in all the colder climates. The insulation goes around the slab like the crust goes around a slice of bread. In this house, it consists of foam glass.

Still, that's only standard nowadays. For extra comfort this house has insulation also against heat flow straight down. The concrete slab is in reality a sort of club sandwich. One of its layers is light, fluffy vermiculite concrete that acts as insulation.

THIS closes the last gap through which heat could escape from this unusually well-insulated house. And with this thought, Mr. and Mrs. Reader, we could well leave you saying: "That's all you need to know." But that would be cheating. You want to understand how a modern house works, why it is designed the way it is. All right:

You've got to catch one more idea. What had the architect actually in mind when he put that layer of insulating cement into the slab? As explained above, the heat loss downward is not serious, because the heat is not really lost. What is serious is something else. And here we come back strangely to the main characteristic of the modern house—its big windows.

On a winter morning, the house needs vigorous heating in order to be comfortable. By ten or so, the sun starts pouring in through the large windows. The house now gets if anything, too hot. You want your heat off. After three or so, it gets cold again fast, and you want heat again. In general words, extra-big windows make for extra-abrupt changes in the heat requirements of the house. To keep a big-windowed house comfortable, you need a heating system that's quick, responsive light-footed. And of course a heating system that works from a plain concrete slab is extremely sluggish; it takes 24 hours to get warm and takes 24 hours to cool off. Right there you have another reason why a house with lots of glass sometimes turns out to be a flop. Windows facing in the wrong direction are trouble source number one. A too-sluggish heating system is a close second. And that is the real reason why the architects here put a layer of insulation into the slab. He wanted to speed up the response of the heating system. The insulation sort of cuts off the big bulk of concrete, the part that is below the insulation layer, from the hourly heating and cooling. When the sun disappears, only the top layer of the slab now has to be warmed up, and it warms up fast. When the sun starts shining into the big windows, only the top layer has to cool off, and it cools fast.

So, what this house says to you by its insulation is really a message about how to enjoy Big Glass in comfort. It says: Big Glass must face south. Big Glass should be sealed double-glazing. Big Glass needs Big Draperies. Big Glass needs a light-footed heating system. It's worth remembering.

ust suppose everybody had he same face . . .

Imagine how difficult life would be if you couldn't tell friend from stranger by just a glance at a face!

And imagine how difficult your shopping would be if you couldn't identify the goods you buy by the makers' brand names on them!

What faces do for you on people you meet, these brand names do for you on products you buy.

Because of brand name advertisements in these pages, you can do a lot of "shopping" sitting right where you are now. You read about new things, changes in familiar ones. You accept or reject, without stepping out of the house. Brand name advertising keeps you informed, and saves you time.

Because of brand names on the goods in the store, you quickly find just what you want, and know just what you're going to get. Brand names safeguard your money by assuring constant quality and value of the things you buy.

Because makers of brand name goods know they must compete against others for your favor, they have to strive always for new ideas and better quality. Brand names assure you progress in continuous development of goods for better living.

Remember — as you look through the ads in this magazine — nowhere else in the world do people get the protections you get when you choose among American manufacturers' and named goods!

Whenever you buy — demand the brand you want

A new kind of Garden Sculpture

Any of these three beautiful pieces can be used for cut flowers, filled with pots of plants already in bloom, or enjoyed as fine art alone. They are handmade, in white or terra-cotta. Courtesy of Waldron Associates.

When you extend the house out into the garden as a terrace for living, you create a need for a new kind of garden sculpture—art to be lived with and used, sculpture rugged and stable, able to withstand the crush of children's rumpus and terrace partying. Here are three indoor objects scaled up for use in this new roofless room.

WORK- SAVERS for GARDENERS

Gardening is a chore only if you waste time and energy. Well-designed, appropriate equipment is an investment in leisure

Mowing the lawn should require no more exertion than walking at a leisurely gait, guiding a self-propelled mower, like this Jacobsen "Manor."
Roller-driven, cuts close to trees, obstructions.

Garden housekeeping calls for a rugged, easy to lead, easy to empty cart. Milcor Gardener Cart, successor to the old-fashioned, hard-to-push wheelbarrow, is also useful for hauling wash, groceries, children.

ie Sprowel is indispensable, really replaces both rden trowel (handle never breaks off) and small ade or shovel. Far lighter, more maneuverable.

Hedges are practical now that electric trimmers do the work. This Sunbeam trimmer shears as fast as you care to walk, easily slices through sizable shoots.
Plug it into your ordinary 110-volt house current.

Why should gardening be a grubby business that scratches and cuts you, stains hands? Tough (but soft) Gard'nettes protect you against powerful insect killers.

FOUR PHOTOGRAPHS BY GOTTSCHO-SCHLEISNER

prinkling the lawn by hand does almost no good; ou must apply at least 1" of water. Automatic unbeam Rain King pulls itself along, waters a strip p to 50' wide and 150' long, then shuts itself off.

Gardening with just one hoe is silly. Here is the basic Union's Speedline collection of the right tool for the task. Prevents your wasting time and energy, hoeing or cultivating with makeshifts.

Garden hose is lighter and better! These 50' coils of Goodyear's long-life vinyl hose weigh only a fraction of old-fashioned kinds. New inside smoothness cuts friction, results in more usable water pressure.

How to hang long-handled tools is always a problem with gardeners. Milcor Gardener tool rack nails to garage wall, provides space for hoes plus five shovels, spades, prevents mishaps.

Trimming lawn edges is a must if your garden is to look tidy. Britten's electric Trim-Master, Jr. converts this time-consuming job into the fastest, easiest part of lawn care. Cuts right up to rocks, fences, and walls. No need to lift it.

... the fast growing tree that encourages beautiful lawns

The Moraine Locust is a beautiful new shade tree, a patented variety developed from the honey locust. It is thornless and seedless, storm-resistant and hardy. It has smooth brownish bark and luxuriant dark green foliage. Especially important to home owners is the fact that the shape of the Moraine Locust tree and the laciness of its compound leaves let enough light filter through to encourage growth of a perfect lawn beneath. Trees have reached 25-to-30-foot height within 7 years. Ask your local nurseryman for Moraine Locust.

then, could the architect go on to develop the details of the floor plan.
How do you do this kind of thing on another piece of land?

Each plot of ground has its natural resources. Obviously some have more than others—better trees, exposure, more interesting topography, and outlook. But many a lot, rich in natural resources, is ruined by unimaginative development. Actually, the way to develop a lot—in fact, the way to buy one—is not to stand on the street and try to imagine what it will "look like." The thing to do is to walk to the center of the plot and study it from the inside outward.

Ask yourself: What are the compass points? Where will the sun rise and set, summer and winter? Where will summer breezes come from? Where winter winds? Analyze the trees: Will they shade your house from south around to northwest? Will they cut off breezes or view? Or, if there are no trees how many are needed and where should they be?

Analyze the view. Is there a distant one? Is it permanent? That is, can no neighbors cut it off? Can you enjoy it in comfort? Many a western view is so unpleasant it's never "used." Does it work in reverse? That is, can other people look in as well as you can look out? If so, there's a privacy problem to be solved.

If there's no natural view, can you create one within your own lot lines by means of landscaping? And while you're on the subject of privacy, how close are the neighbors? How much planting, fencing, and walls are necessary to protect your windows and outdoor sitting areas from curious eyes? This is a two-way problem: Not only do your house and grounds want to be pleasant for you to look at but, so far as possible, for your neighbor to look at as well. The Golden Rule was never more applicable than in house and site planning.

Does the lot have topographic assets—slopes, ledges, rock outcroppings—which might be used to advantage? Does it have good topsoil? What about surface drainage? If it's on a hillside, ask the neighbors what happens during heavy rains.

Does it have native plant material worth preserving? Far too many people scalp a lot of all indigenous shrubbery, only to replace it with a lot of exotics that are expensive to buy and hard to grow. Think twice before you bulldoze out the blueberry, sumac, buck-

New Gardening Aid Ready for Bulb Planting

Flower Growers Get Benefit of Kriliium* Soil Conditioner
First Time This Fall

ST. LOUIS — Autumn, 1952, will go down in history as the first bulb-planting season to have the advantage of a great new gardening aid... Kriliium soil conditioner. As a result, next spring's blossoming season is expected to make front-page flower news everywhere.

Soil Conditioning Must be Deep

Experienced gardeners know one main key to bulb success is planting in depth. That means that clay, hard-packed or lumpy soil must be conditioned in depth, as well, if the bulbs are to get proper aeration, moisture and room for putting out root structure.

Handy Planting Chart

The chart at left shows recommended planting depth for various bulbs: 3 to 4 in. for crocus; 5 to 6 in., tulip; 6 to 7 in., hyacinth; 6 to 8 in., daffodil.
This doesn't mean soil in the entire bed must be conditioned to these depths.

Instead, when the hole is dug for each bulb, the earth at the bottom, below the bulb, can be treated for a couple of inches with Kriliium... then Kriliium should be mixed thoroughly with the soil from the hole before it is replaced over the bulb.

Two Convenient Sizes

Kriliium in Merloam* formulation for home gardeners is on sale in two sizes, 1-lb. and 5-lb., at garden, hardware, department and other stores throughout the United States and in Canada. New 1-lb. size, $1.69. The 5-lb. size, $6.95. Full directions with each package. Also available, full strength Loamaker* formulation of Kriliium in 10-lb. packages for extensive gardening operations where large areas are to be treated and for commercial use.

berry, kalmia, and the like which abound in so much of America.

Ask yourself about circulation. Can the house be placed so that every bakery and dry cleaner delivery need not pass all the house windows? Can the garbage truck pick up the waste without disturbing the tea party on the terrace? How long need a drive be, how steep? What about ice? Snow plowing? Where can you put the service yard so it won't bother you or the neighbors?

These are the things you discuss with your landscape architect and your architect. Both these professionals should start on your house at the same time—at the beginning. If they do not, some aspect of site development may be overlooked by your architect, and it will be too late to correct it if the landscape designer is not invited into your project until after construction has been started.

Living-dining room

A separate thermostat system in this spacious area compensates for solar radiation when the sun is bright. And on blustery days it compensates, too, for cold winds from the northeast, and for extra heat from the fireplace.

The Kind Of Comfort You've Always Wished You Had

Now you can have the exact temperature you want—in every room—with Honeywell Zone Control

The striking new home of Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Schaible in Lafayette, Indiana, is a fine example of the modern convenience and functionality offered by the tri-level house.

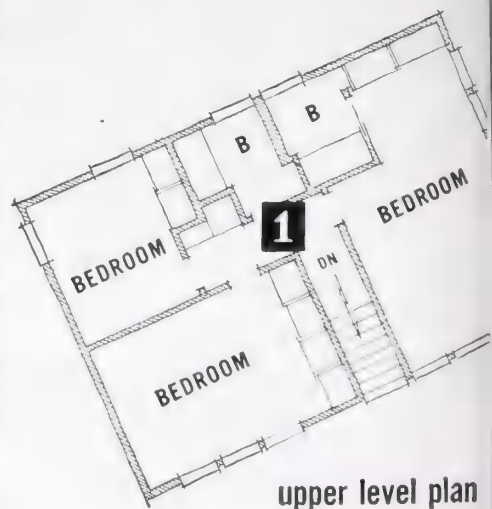

And it's a fine example, too, of the superior kind of comfortable warmth Honeywell Zone Control provides—in every part of the house—all winter long.

When developing the plans for the home, Mr. Schaible, an architect by profession, realized no ordinary temperature control system would do.

"Mrs. Schaible and I wanted a house that was really comfortable, in every room, in any kind of winter weather," he says. "That's why we chose Honeywell Zone Control, and divided the house into three heat control zones—living, sleeping and recreational."

Today, with a separate Honeywell thermostat system in each of these zones, Mr. and Mrs. Schaible and their guests enjoy the right degree of comfortable warmth, in all parts of the house, no matter how changeable the winter weather.

So why don't you ask your architect or heating engineer about Honeywell Zone Control? Once you have it installed in your home you'll enjoy the kind of comfort you've always wished you had.

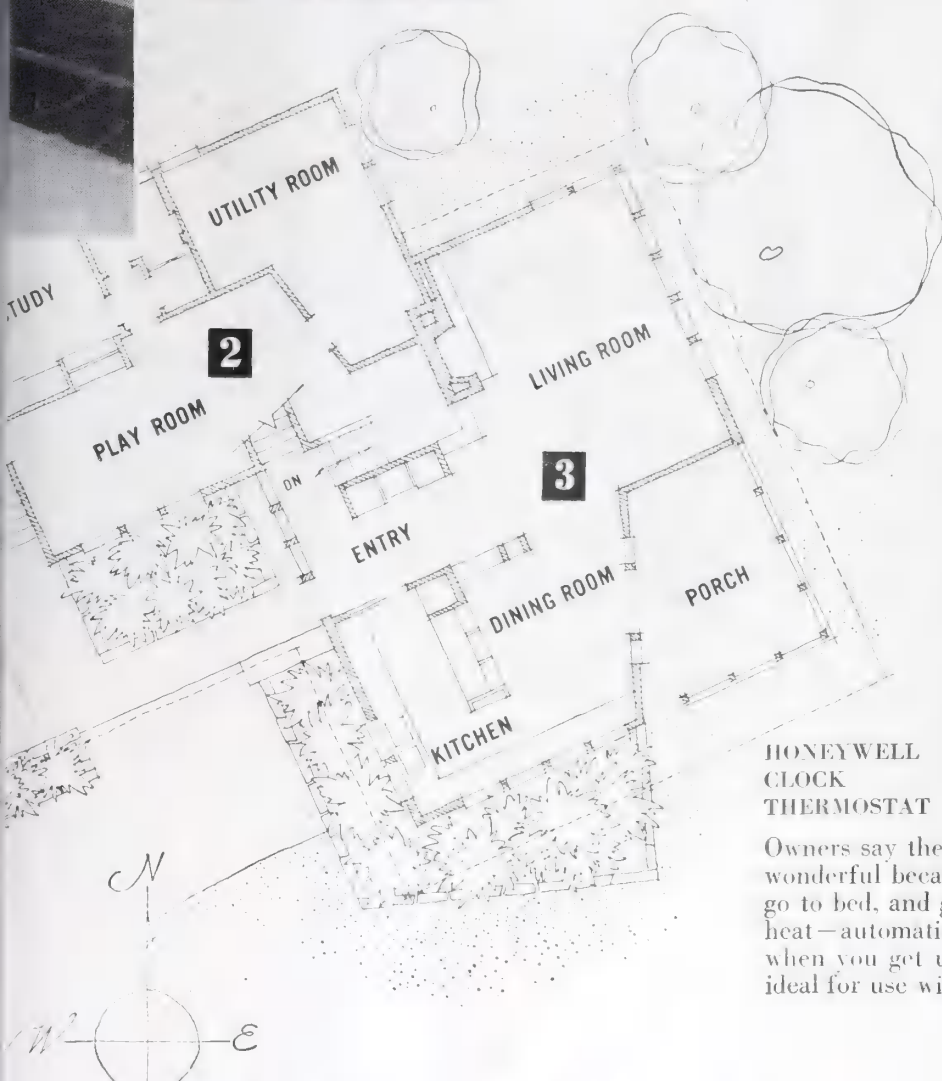

upper level plan

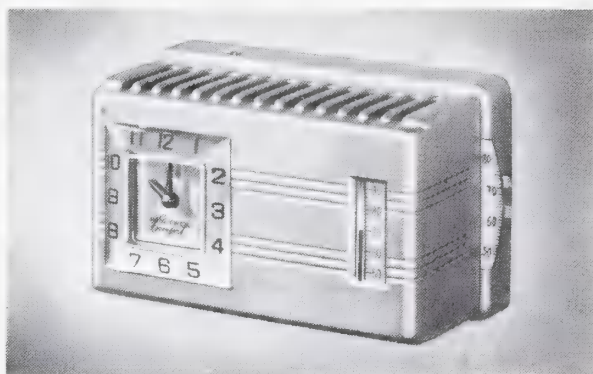

The three heating zones correspond to the three "levels" of the home. The upper level—the sleeping area—is in heating zone 1. Those are bedroom windows upstairs, to the left of the chimney. The lower level, which includes the play room, is in heating zone 2. That's the play room window just to the right of the car port. The living-dining area—heating zone 3—is at the far right.

Comfort demands of the lower level, which includes the play room and study, are easily met by the separate thermostat system in heating zone 2. That's the area you see as you look through the shelves in the above photograph. Thus, Honeywell Zone Control keeps the temperature just right, all winter long, in every part of the house.

All bedrooms in the Schaible home are located on the upper level—in heating zone 1. In this zone, a Honeywell electronic clock thermostat automatically turns temperatures down at night, up in the morning.

THERMOSTAT

Owners say the Honeywell electric or electronic clock thermostat is wonderful because it turns down the heat—automatically—when you go to bed, and gives you a nice cool room to sleep in; turns up the heat—automatically—while you're still asleep, and your home is warm when you get up. Saves you fuel, besides! The clock thermostat is ideal for use with zone control.

You're looking at the lightest, fastest, easiest-to-use vacuum cleaner ever invented that also does the work of carpet sweeper, mop, broom, dust pan—IN HALF THE TIME!

The only vacuum cleaner designed for daily use! Regina packs a world of power and speed into a mere 6½ pounds (less than half the weight of the average vacuum cleaner) and calls it the Electrikbroom. Here's a real worksaver you can use effortlessly without attachments... draws off dust before it becomes deeply embedded... picks up lint, threads, dirt and sand, even on bare floors and linoleum. The flexible rubber nozzle gets right up and under furniture. No marring of woodwork... no moving heavy pieces. When through (usually in a matter of minutes), you empty the dirt cup like an ash tray and hang the cleaner back in any convenient hook. It's as simple as that. And it costs so little, every home should have one. Your appliance dealer will be glad to give you a quick demonstration.

This NEW $20 set of Norman Rockwell paintings is YOURS

FREE! Gratuit! Umsonst! GRATIS!

if you obtain a Trial Membership in The Heritage Club now

BECAUSE we are offering you a $20 set of Norman Rockwell's paintings as an inducement to obtain a Trial Membership in The Heritage Club at this time, we had better tell you something about them:

In the first place, they are not the original paintings in oil! If you are in position to pay several thousands of dollars to obtain one of Norman Rockwell's original oils (and if you know where one could be obtained), you won't want these facsimiles.

For they are facsimiles. Yet we will wager one hundred sixty-cent dollar that, even after examining them, you wouldn't recognize them as such, for two good sixty-cent dollars that your friends won't do so, either!

They are created by several unusual processes. They are in full color; and they are on heavy hard-canvas such as oil painters use; and their surfaces are moulded in the brush-strokes. The facsimiles have been created in this fashion more, of some of Norman Rockwell's famous paintings: notably his paintings of The Four Seasons. We would present those to you, if we could! But we can't, for the right to reproduce them doesn't belong to us. However, we do have the right to reproduce Norman Rockwell's paintings made to illustrate Huckleberry Finn; for they were made for our own now-famous edition.

WE HAVE NOW TAKEN three of them (the original oils are in the possession of the Metropolitan Museum) and have created facsimiles which are four times larger than the plates in the polished book. Each is twelve inches across by seven inches long! Each will be sold in the shops for $6.95; the set of three, for $20.

But we will give you a complete set, free, gratuit, umsonst, GRATIS—if you obtain a Trial Membership in The Heritage Club at this time. Why?

WELL, in the first place, we have persuaded the mills which produce our fine papers to increase their allotment to us—with the result that, of six of our recent publications, we have obtained from the printers about a thousand extra copies. So, in the second place, we can now accept a thousand members: to try us with these books.

BUT WE WANT to enroll this limited number of people with a limited expenditure upon advertisements: by offering this irresistible inducement to you, to become a new member. If you do, you will obtain six beautiful, beautiful books—at the same price as ordinary rental library fiction.

You will obtain a copy of The Pilgrim's Progress with the newly-discovered water-colors by Blake; and The Book of Ruth with the miniatures-in-color by Arthur Szyk; and Great Expectations illustrated by the English painter Edward Ardizzone; and Confessions of an English Opium-Eater illustrated with gravures by Zhenya Gay; and The Way of All Flesh; and The Sketch-Book of Geoffrey Crayon . . .

Or, if any of these books should not be of interest to you, you may choose substitutions out of a long list of Heritage books. Then, after the trial period, you can decide whether to continue. Obviously, we think you will!

FOR THE MEMBERS of The Heritage Club regularly come into possession of those "classics which are our heritage from the past, in editions which will be the heritage of the future." Yet each of these books costs each member only $3.65! or only $3.28 if paid for in advance!

A PROSPECTUS is now ready. You are invited to send for a copy. One of the remaining Trial Memberships will then be reserved for you—and also a set of the Norman Rockwell facsimiles. Never in the history of book publishing has a greater bargain than this been offered to wise buyers of books. The coupon below enables you to put this statement to the test:

Reservation Coupon

595 MADISON AVE., New York 22

Please send me a copy of the Prospectus describing the limited number of Trial Memberships which you are offering at this time. I understand that you will reserve a Trial Membership for me and that I am entitled to a portfolio of the Norman Rockwell paintings, without cost, when I send my formal application.

MUSIC LOVER

By Richard Williams

It is not difficult to find a satisfactory gift for the music lover. In fact, anybody who has a hobby (music, fishing, or gardening) can be made happy. Accommodating people, these musical enthusiasts. They are the ones who'll accept any gift gratefully just as long as it has something to do with music. No problem here such as the man "who has everything." The man with a hobby never has everything.

But stay away from gadgets! The one thing that music has in common with fishing is the fact that both have produced an uncommon amount of tasteless "novelties." You can get a teddy bear in whose belly is concealed a Swiss music box. How about a musical atomizer which squirts a melody as you squirt perfume? Not to mention a knight-in-armor cigarette lighter whose visor pushes back and who plays a tune when you light a cigarette. Also a musical jug which gurgles the melody of "How Dry I Am" as you uncork it.

High on the list of gifts that do make sense is the record album. You can choose it safely, even if you are not too sure of the kind of music that the recipient likes. Record stores are usually gracious about exchanging of records (provided that they have been played no more than once).

Some superb new recordings have been released recently, or at least within the year. They, therefore, may be news even to the assiduous collector. Of the hundred of records I have listened to during 1952 I have enjoyed these most.

The recording by Toscanini and the NBC Symphony of Beethoven's Ninth. For the first time this mighty sermon in sound, which expresses the creed that all of us believe in and few of us act upon, is adequately represented on records. This recording, made in Carnegie Hall last spring, represents one of the major events in recording history.

A series of albums recorded at the Bach Festival in Perpignan under the direction of the great cellist Pablo Casals, now turned conductor. A limited edition of the whole set is available as a princely gift but the albums may also be bought individually. This, also, is an important recording event.

De Falla's "The Three-Cornered Hat" recorded by Ernest Anserme and L'Orchestre de la Suisse Romande. Remarkable for the brilliance and juiciness of its sound and very

SWEDISH MADE "ANGEL CHIMES"

Revolving "Angel Chimes"

From Sweden comes this enchanting decorative innovation. Heat rising from the burning candles causes the Herald Angels to revolve lightly striking the bells with their wings. The resulting chime-like sound is charming as church bells afar. This is the original, one and only "Angel Chimes." It differs from other candelabra of its type in that (1) it is made of heavy gauge, highly polished brass instead of copper, (2) it has a tray base to catch possible drippings, (3) it has holders for four candles instead of the usual three, (4) it is imported from Sweden where it is precision made. 13" high, 4 candles included free with each. Buy two—one for each end of the mantel, dining table, etc. Or if you desire only one for yourself the extra will serve as a perfect gift. $2.75 ea. 2 for $5.00 postpaid.

Ach! It gives a wonderful good breakfast!

Pure Pork Country Sausage
Old-Fashioned Buckwheat Cakes
100% Pure Maple Syrup

Our farm sausage is made only from fresh, lean primal cuts—tender loins and shoulders. Seasoned, according to an old Pennsylvania Dutch recipe, with just the right spices to give it that "wunderbar" taste, as they say up here.

Our ready-mix buckwheat flour is still water ground as in earliest Pennsylvania Dutch history. Not sieved fine like most flours today but unbolted so it keeps all those important food values and rich buckwheat flavor.

We have the best pure maple syrup you can buy. Put all together—Ach! here is a breakfast to make anybody "hoongerich"—young or old.

AN AUTOMATIC FRUIT, VEGETABLE, AND POTATO PEELER

"It's wonderful, peels my potatoes in a matter of a couple of minutes," says one woman with a family of five.

After years of research, we've designed a fruit and vegetable peeler for home use... peels potatoes, beets, onions, apples, oranges, etc., in a matter of a few minutes... it's easy — just attach Univex Home-A-Peel to your electric mixer... turn on the switch and the Home-A-Peel does the rest. Univex Home-A-Peel is manufactured by the same makers of the famous Univex Commercial Vegetable Peelers now being used in hotels, restaurants, schools, institutions and hospitals all over the world.

An ideal gift for any woman who has an electric mixer... ends peeling drudgery... peels faster, cleaner and easier. All you do is attach peeler to electric mixer... fill bowl with potatoes, vegetables or fruit... special abrasive technique rubs off micro-thin peel, preserves the most nutritious part of the food, ordinarily lost in manual peeling... pulverized skins easily disposable.

entertaining and bright music.

Exceptionally brilliant sound may also be heard in the orchestral version of Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition," a record by Rafael Kubelik and the Chicago Symphony.

For opera lovers, a complete Il Trovatore with an all-star cast. Zinka Milanov is Yugoslavian, Leonard Warren, American; Jussi Bjoerling, Swedish; and Fedora Barbieri, Italian—and all can sing. This is operatic internationalism at its best.

In a lighter vein, a complete new "Merry Widow" with Dorothy Kirsten and Robert Rounseville, charmingly presented.

A fine interpretation of Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony (No. 6) by William Steinberg and the Pittsburgh Symphony.

For piano enthusiasts: the complete piano works of Ravel by Casadesus. Beethoven's "Emperor" Concerto done in most eloquent style by Horowitz with Fritz Reiner conducting. Or one of the records by the young Paul Badura-Skoda, a pianist of exceptional talent.

Not very many interesting new books on music were published this year. A safe gift is a small encyclopedia. Everybody needs one. I suggest the new "Concise Oxford Dictionary of Music"; it is accurate, handsome and inexpensive.

For the serious record collector there has just been published a majestic and exhaustive encyclopedia listing all or virtually all recordings made from 1925 to June 1951. It is called "The World Encyclopedia of Recorded Music." Francis F. Clough and G. J. Cummings, the authors, must be descendants of the famous French encyclopedists.

Some other ideas for musical gifts:

Scores. How about a complete set of the six Tchaikovsky symphonies in miniature orchestral scores? Germany used to be the source of supply for these miniature scores. Now they are being published and printed here and easily available.

Song Books or Piano Scores. The most welcome are collections of folk songs (Stephen Foster, Amer-in Songs, Songs of Many Lands, etc.), for playing or singing at home. Operettas are also good for this pleasant purpose: Rodgers and Hammerstein's "The King and I" is available as a piano score.

Porcelain Figures of Famous Composers. A set of small Chelsea figures exists. They are beautiful, but not too rare. You may find one or two at least in antique shops. They should not be expensive—less than ten dollars. Small bronze figures can also be found. Prices depend on beauty and age, of course.

French Opera Plates. (Not antiques.) Eight different scenes from different operas, about two dollars a piece and quite handsome.

Musical Coins or Medallions. A very good series is currently being manufactured by the French government in its mint. Several stores import them and any coin dealer probably knows about them.

Musical Postage Stamps. A vast variety. Particularly handsome are the Italian stamps, including a series made last year to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of Verdi's death.

Swiss Music Boxes. These range from cheap to very fine. The very fine ones you will find in collections or museums, but once in a while you can pick up a beauty. German music boxes are again appearing on the market. I have seen one depicting an angel orchestra, another with a windmill scene. Each plays a folk song.

A Wire Recorder—for taking down the broadcasts of the New York Philharmonic or the performances of the Metropolitan Opera on Saturday afternoons.

Musical Instruments. You can hardly give a clarinet or an accordion to anybody but a member of your own family or somebody whose wishes you know very well. However, there are old instruments to be found and these, with their beautiful wood and interesting shapes, are often used for decoration. Personally, I do not care for making a flower pot out of a violin.

A Sheet of Medieval Illuminated Manuscript, with the notes hand-lettered usually in gold. Available in print and rare book stores are not nearly as expensive as you might think. Bargains can be uncovered in second-hand book stores.

PANTRY SHELF NEWS

By Julie Polshek

Smoked turkey and ham, universally popular for holiday eating and giving, are apt openers for this "Merry Christmas" column. The delectable ones in point hail from Valley Forge Farms in Pennsylvania Dutch country. The farm's de-boned ham, a brand-new addition to their offerings, calls for special applause particularly for buffet parties. The succulent meat comes to you ready-to-eat, skinned, virtually fat-free, rolled and tied. Every bit of it can be sliced with ease. These deboned hams are 8 to 10 pounds, cost $1.35 per pound, a mere 10 cents higher than the farm's conventional, ready-to-eat hams.

Both hams and turkeys go through a pickling process in herbed, vintage wines, then on to the smokehouse where smoldering apple and hickory embers slowly impart their savory tang to the meats. It's all handled with a skill that enhances the natural flavors of these choice-quality meats.

The full-breasted smoked turkeys (6 to 18 pounds) cost $1.70 per pound; a half bird (3½ to 8 pounds) is available for $1.80 per pound. The smoked turkey breasts, an all-white-meat cut from a 14-pound bird, are ideal for parties. The cost is $14.

The hams (10 to 15 pounds) can be had farmer's style at a $1.10 per pound; ready-to-eat style, is $1.25 a pound, relieves you of the roasting bother. It's pre-shrunk, so to speak, and thus, actually, no costlier than the farmer's style. But at any price this would make fine holiday eating. The address of Valley Forge Farms is R.D. 1, Lansdale, Pennsylvania.

Additional flavors not included above are Anise, Kümmel, Rum, Bourbon- or Scotch-Cordial, Burgundy, Sherry, Port, Black Currant, Passion Fruit, Strawberry, Maple, Molasses. Great truths, however, need restatement in the language and spirit of our own generation. Here, in an article deriving from his book, "Faith for Living,"* the American philosopher, Lewis Mumford, describes the good family life and the architecture necessary for it, and outlines an exciting way to record your family's journey through the years. Now, at Christmas, is the time to recreate your family life*

of the family

By Lewis Mumford

In the days to come, the family will be a reality of incomparably higher importance than it has been for the last century. And why should it not? For as our modern age re-orientes itself toward life, it will bring to the culture of the family a wealth of scientific and imaginative interests that our ancestors did not possess. Many of us will find that adventure, even more than charity, begins at home.

Our homes and communities will, even as physical structures, express the central importance of the family; they will be built on a human scale, and wear a friendly face. They will be designed out of love, not merely out of economy; and they will be designed to make love possible.

Almost everywhere the pattern of domestic living has become rigid and constrained. Life succeeds only in an environment of life. The sterile felicity of the urban apartment house—even a model apartment house, with open areas around it and plenty of sunlight—is not, can never be, a substitute for living space. Here in the past we have reversed the order of human needs. As the number of mechanical utilities has increased within the house, its space has shrunk and the land around it has become over-crowded.

In some of our desperate efforts in the United States to repair the evils of old slums we have created new ones, even for the upper-income groups. One would think that the designers of our skyscraper housing projects hated the family; and without being conscious of the bias, they probably do. How otherwise could they be so ignorant of its requirements, so unable imaginatively to interpret them?

The family's basic need is for space: garden space and house space. Space for living: commodious rooms, well equipped for rest, relaxation, conversation, social intercourse; space for infants to toddle in and for run-about children to romp in; space for solitude as well as for sociability, the boudoir or "sulking room," and the quiet study for reading and writing; space for storage, so neither physically nor spiritually will the family have to live from hand to mouth; space to store clothes and playthings; space to keep pictures safely; space to keep all manner of records, photographs, papers, diaries, drawings, so that the past will not become too shadowy; space for growing things, with a soil capable of yielding good measures of flowers, fruits, vegetables. And space is precisely what is lacking; we have been trained to do without it; our very housing authorities, fatuously thinking that they are improving conditions, boast of establishing first-class mechanical equipment in the midst of fourth-class living space.

For a family to maintain its sense of itself, it must have a permanent headquarters, a permanent gathering place. It must provide opportunities for the old and the young to meet and mix and to encounter life together. That solidity requires land and economic foundations: at least enough land for a house, at least enough economic support to keep the house in order.

To build a house: to plant a tree: to beget a child—these are the steps that make all the more social tasks of creation possible. Through these acts the past relives itself, starting afresh, as if love had never awakened before; and so, the future replenishes itself with hope and expectation. Even to watch a garden grow from day to day, especially if one has planted it and cared for it, deepens one's solid inner faith for living. And still more a child, or a brood of children.

Be fruitful, not prudent: increase and multiply your children, not the ciphers in your bank account. Those are the sane words for our time. The girls and boys who marry young will taste young love's first tartness; and have that for contrast with the richer, juicier years of old experience. The young people who dare to have a child, though they must use a basket for a crib, will have a better reward than if they save their dollars for a swell layette and crib and carriage—and miss the baby. Those who have no old home to look back to, may have it still in the home that their children and their grandchildren will look back to. Life will go on through the dark days and the scrimping days because the real demands of life are simple and direct—much more direct and simple than those who see only the complicated scaffolding of our power-civilization have dared to dream. When one removes that heavy scantling, the outlines of life's structure itself are plain.

The culture of the family will be our first great simplification of life; our first act of restoring faith for the living. He who has dropped a seed into a garden or into a woman's womb is ready to fight for the right of that seed to grow and fulfill itself. He who has stood by it and nurtured it is himself in the line of growth. Many other conditions are necessary for the good life; but this bottoms them all.

The Family Log

Among the family papers of a neighbor of mine is a biography of his great-grandfather; the notebook still remains in the house the old man lived in, though since that time the family itself has divided and moved away. "My dear Brother," this family book begins, "I have long wished that our children and those who shall come after them might have some knowledge of those traits in the character of our honored and dear Father, which we remember with so much pleasure, and which in some respect distinguished him from others."

This book is a happy attempt to understand and appreciate a personality, to define the values he lived by and to pass them on. In purpose and belief, it is just the opposite of those sordid debunking biographies that were fashionable in the 1920's, beginning with Lytton Strachey's series of little sneers at the eminent Victorians. And at the end, this story carries an account of the military enlistment and eventual death of the writer's own son, not yet nineteen years of age, in the Civil War. A noble record, a beautiful book, this country biography: it gives the reader a faithful picture of a family that has lived and left its mark on life.

In that simple introduction, of brother writing to brother, is the spirit of an older text: Let us now praise famous men and our fathers that begat us. This impulse is the very essence of both history and biography, or at least of any that deserve the name. The fact that such family papers are no longer produced, sometimes no longer kept and treasured, shows more than any other single fact what has happened to the very principle of family continuity in our society. Even the family Bible, with its record of births, christenings, notable events, honors, and deaths, has disappeared. If any records of family life remain, they are only those of the scattered individuals: one must search for them in the bureau that registers births, in the (Continued on page 217)

Why not take the first step toward the rebirth of your family life by keeping a "family log"? Begin it this New Year's Day, if you haven't already. Like a ship's log, let it record your family's journey through life with pictures, letters, clippings, birth and health data, and your own notes. Read above how Mr. Mumford pursues this idea, inspired by Kenneth S. Beam's pamphlet, "The Family Log"

A ROOM FOR FAMILY LIVING

You come across it everywhere—the room a family has created for its shared enjoyments. Here is evidence that moderns are instinctively recognizing the need for a casual, good-looking room which encourages all the diverse activities a family can enjoy as a group—dining, dancing, working, playing, listening to music

PHOTOGRAPH BY GUY BURGESS

Music is a family affair and it needn't be limited to passive listening. Whenever a family gathers round a piano to sing, whenever mother plays for a 7-year-old to dance, family ties are strengthened. You can enjoy such experiences without restraint in a room like this in the Colorado Springs home of Decorator Harry E. Francis. Gulbransen piano has Solovox attachment.

Though not a study, the family room makes a good place for concentrated desk work during certain hours. When the family is together, you have a corner for co-operative tasks like writing round-robin letters, wrapping gifts. See how convenient the typewriter shelf is to the desk seen in the photograph above. The record player is equipped with a Lincoln record changer.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY MAYNARD PARKER

Children could romp and teenagers could square dance without threatening the dignity of this friendly room with its practical Kentile floor. The antique furnishings are cherished. But they are used daily, not kept on formal display. A tea table by the window is a happy spot for Sunday breakfasts or celebration treats. Wallpaper and matching fabric, A. L. Diamant & Co.

A room for family living continued

Easy, informal parties call for quick, uncomplicated service. So the Francises installed a "party kitchen" in an alcove of their family room. In it, a handsome antique bar in Biedermeier style faces a small but complete line-up of Hotpoint kitchen equipment. Old shutters of mahogany and pine screen the cooking area from the living room.

TWO PHOTOGRAPHS BY MAYNARD PARKER

The "party kitchen" is located around corner from fireplace. (See photograph on page 122.) Door at one end leads out to a plant room, making facilities equally convenient for dining among greenery.

Create a Climate for Family Memories

When a family celebrates a holiday in its own special way and repeats the experience year after year, it creates a family ritual of deep significance. Family unity is built and strengthened by preserving these customs of doing things together, and memories of them give members of the family a sense of security throughout their lives. For your own family plan a Christmas breakfast table as attractive as any you would give your guests. Wrap your gifts with a thought for the same color scheme and make them part of the decoration. Place settings are by Carole Stupell; gift wrappings, Gift Wrappings, Inc. Photographed by Ezra Stoller at Stowehof, a ski lodge in Stowe, Vt. Lawrence Hess, architect-owner.

The family room takes in its stride half-a-dozen varied activities, but its serene appearance belies its heavy schedule. Mr. and Mrs. Morris Corbman's well-planned family room, in Allentown, Pa., rarely has to be slicked up for company. Materials like natural brick, walls of pecky cypress washed with white, marble table top, and cement floor require little upkeep. The black and white checked fabric on the sectional sofa is woolen suiting material.

Built into one end of the fireplace wall (see opposite page) is a serving pantry screened by wooden shutters. Since the floor is terrazzo, maintenance is no big chore. Notice the roomy dimensions of the upholstered chair below the magazine rack. An oversize chair of that magnitude suggests one of the most cherished of family activities: parent and child sharing a book for reading aloud. All architectural and interior design is the work of Mrs. Corbman.

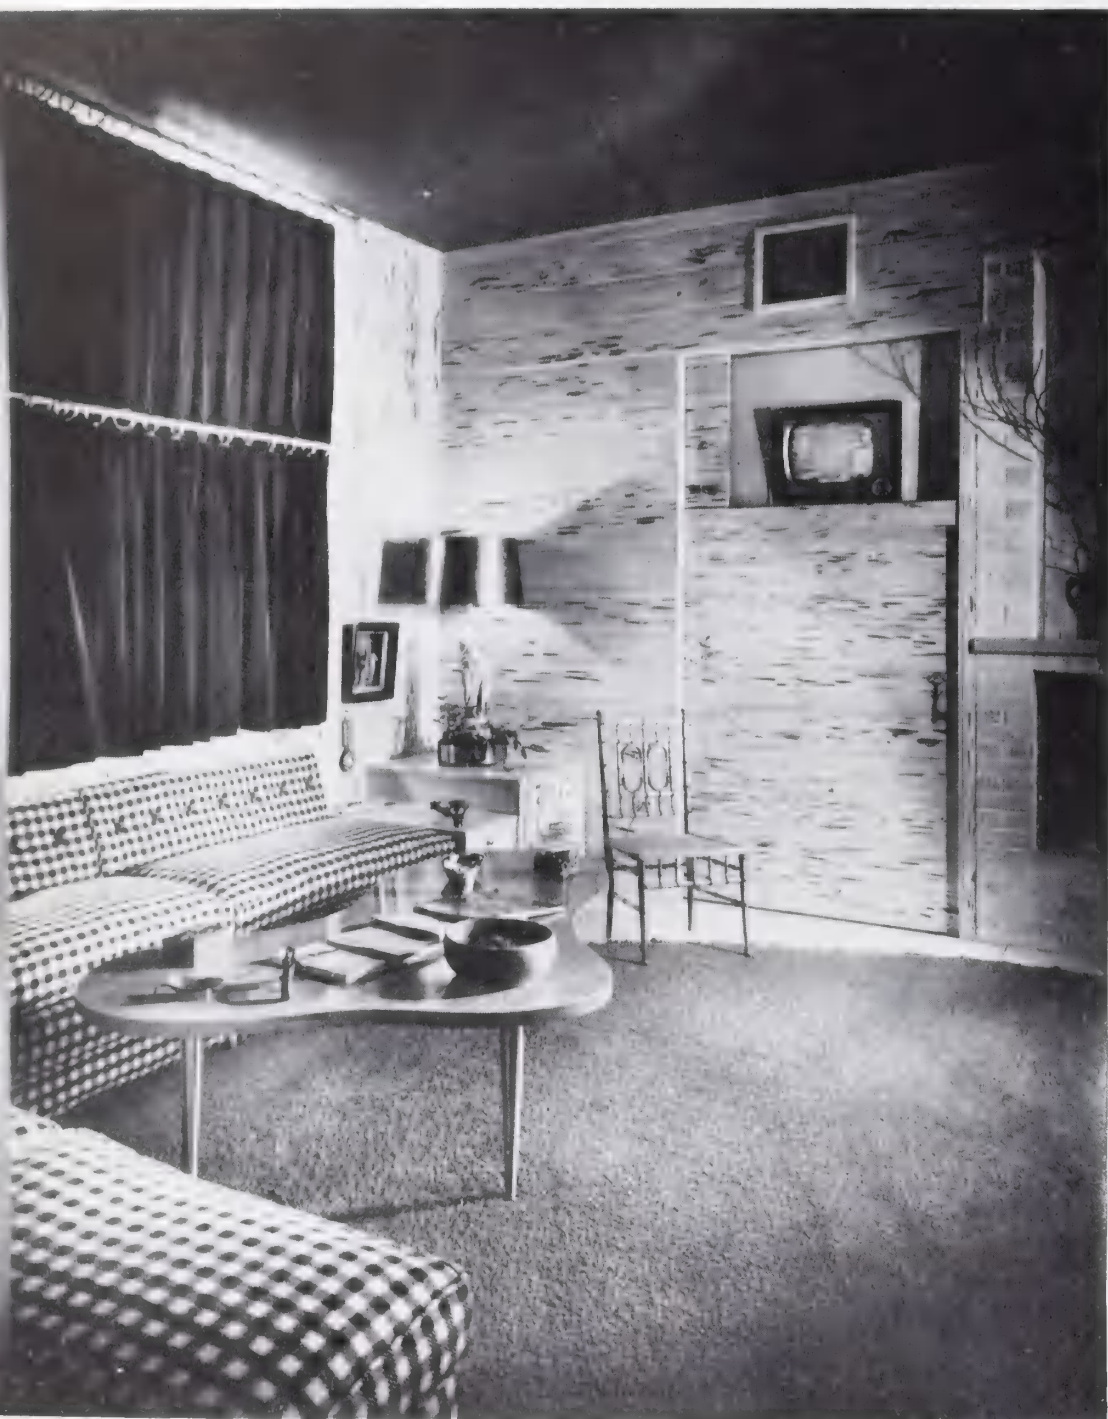

PHOTOGRAPHS BY MAYNARD PARKER

The serving pantry, equipped with sink and refrigerator is a good deal more than a place for mixing drinks. It also functions as a small kitchen area, since the fireplace around the corner to the right is often used for barbecues. A thoughtfully equipped family room encourages informal, spur-of-the-moment parties that help strengthen the ties between members of different generations. When there is a large crowd scattered indoors and out, Mrs. Corbman summons them with a school bell.

The Corbmans' family room is truly a jack-of-all-trades, despite its well-mannered appearance. The long section of the couch under the window was designed for part-time use as an extra guest bed, while the cabinet at the end doubles as night-table and overnight-storage chest. Café curtains at window are made of cotton velvet dress fabric. Above television screen is loud speaker for the music system which originates in another room but has separate controls. It is easy to remove the Nye-Wait rug for dancing.

Household desk work, like keeping records and paying bills, seems much less of a chore if you don't have to do it in solitude. And storage of family documents, safely but conveniently, in a household office like this simplifies the keeping of the family log. If friends drop in to watch television, books and papers may be left just as they are and the sliding door closed to screen the clutter from public view.

PHOTOGRAPH BY MAYNARD PARKER

Around a great big coffee table by a great big fireplace Alan Ladd's family can gather to wrap their Christmas gifts. Supper may be cooked and eaten on the spot, since the fireplace is fully equipped as a barbecue; and recess may be called when it's time for the family's favorite television program. But the simplicity of the furnishings promises there'll be no parental nagging to wet-blanket gay holiday spirits. The television set is a Dumont.

What a Family Room Can Do for You

- It gives you a place where young and old can meet and mix and encounter life together.
- Teenagers can entertain their friends there; children can romp, and toddlers can explore life within the reassuring boundaries of the family circle.
- Celebrations held in the family room develop into family rituals, become life-long memories.

Avoid the food clichés-of-the-season

By Poppy Cannon

Christmas—we know—is no season for an iconoclast. Tradition has its hallowed place at the holiday table. But this is no reason why year after year, at house after house, Christmases without end, we should all eat what seems to be the same turkey, stuffed with the same dressing, served with the same cranberry sauce, giblet gravy, plum pudding, and mince pie.

Let's call a halt to monotony, done in the name of The Season. This year don't let your table or your guests groan from boredom or from having consumed too many victuals. Serve fewer dishes, but make certain that every one of them is interesting. Include in each menu at least one conversation-maker which will pique the interest as well as the appetite.

Look backward—and ahead—for your inspiration. Even in our own comparatively new (Continued on page 132) country there are dozens of seasonal delicacies that have been too long neglected. There are hundreds of delicious foods which have been made available to you in a ready, or almost ready, form. Edible treasure comes from every corner of the world. You will find it at your grocer's, in specialty shops, the epicure counters of department stores, in newspaper and magazine advertisements, and mail-order catalogs.

Browse well before you buy. Use your head, your pen, your telephone to save your heels and nerves. Buying is probably the most important part of your scheme. Begin Christmas food shopping as soon after Thanksgiving as you can manage. Then the shelves are well-stocked with holiday delicacies and the crowds not yet dense. Moreover, the cost spreads out over several weeks and will not disrupt your budget.

As you go through this list of gala gastronomics you will note that—miracle of miracles—very little actual cooking is involved. Nothing is difficult or time-consuming. All the laborious steps are left to the professionals, the food processors and packagers. Yours is the fun and the glory—the easy, epicurean holiday!

1. Bring back from our Old South the festive bowl of ambrosia. Let the fruits be drifted deep in freshly grated, quick-frozen or moist-pack Southern style coconut. Dapple with bright bits of guava jelly. Use sherry to flavor sometimes, or California's amber-sweet Angelica wine.

2. Instead of the too-usual clove, stud a Christmas ham with peppercorns, coarsely crushed rather than ground. They'll stay in place if you press them lightly into the fat.

3. Make a Christmas bread from a hot-roll mix, following the package directions for coffee ring, but adding a teaspoonful of saffron and a half teaspoonful of powdered cardamon. Baked in a long twist, it will be like the famous Lucia bread of Sweden, where it is served traditionally on December 15th with early morning coffee by the youngest and loveliest girl in the household.

4. Remember the Ole Koecks which Washington Irving described so lyrically in the legend of Sleepy Hollow, a holeless doughnut with an intoxicating heart of fruit. Make these, too, from the hot-roll mix. Soak one cup dried fruits—citron and raisins—in  $\frac{1}{3}$  cup cognac with a dash of grated nutmeg. After two hours drain the fruit. Enclose within small balls of dough. Fry golden

This year roast it low and slow

The cost of meat being what it is, it's amazing that more hasn't been said about proper roasting. Who wants to lose a quarter of her meat (or fowl) by shrinkage? Who wants to lose that juicy succulence which she has paid a premium price to get? Yet women are doing both.

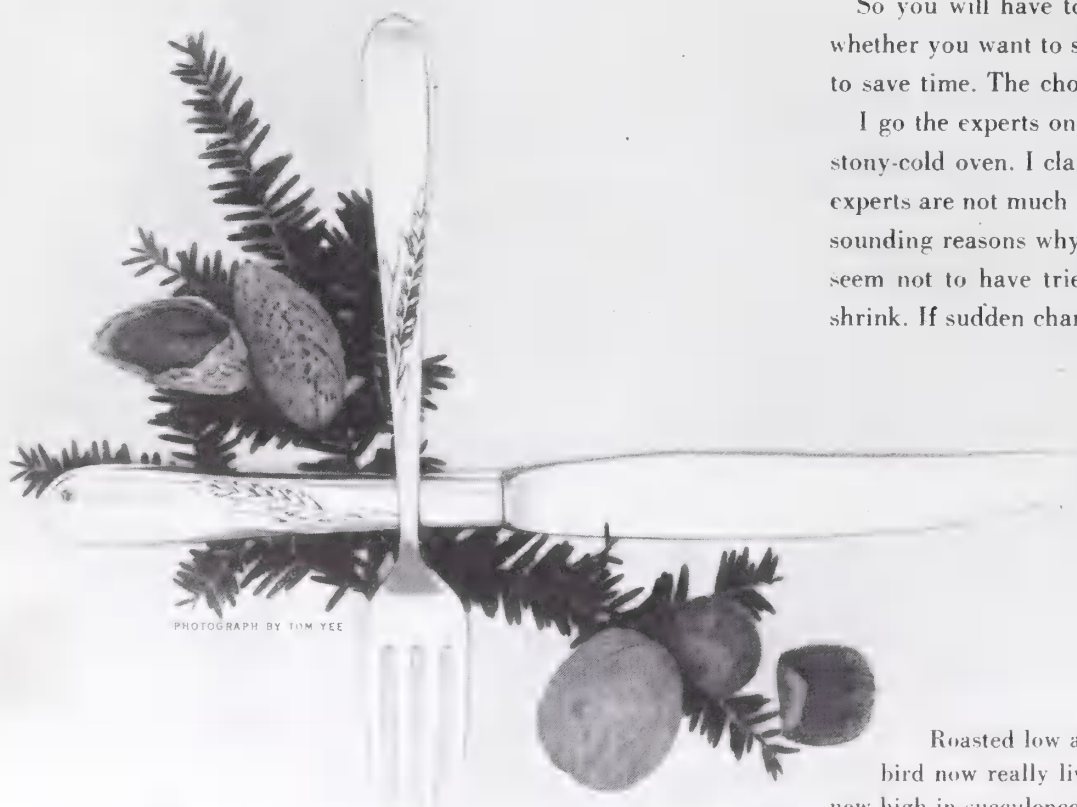

Quite by accident, I stumbled on a better way to roast meat and fowl. Since that fateful day, when my roast swelled instead of shrinking, we at HOUSE BEAUTIFUL have been checking with roasting specialists in the stove laboratories and meat institutes. We uncovered lots of fire and fury. And we've been cooking our way in and out of controversies for several months now. But we have come up with some final conclusions just in time for your holiday roasting.

It all boils down to these simple things: fat side up on a rack in an open pan, no cover, no water, and use a low temperature. All this the experts agree on.

There is some disagreement about how low is low. Recommended temperatures for beef, veal, lamb, and smoked pork are 300°F. to 325°F. For fresh pork they say 350°F. For fowl, 275°F. to 325°F. But they also say that if your oven is capable of being held down to an even 250°F., you can prevent losses (through shrinkage) that add up to real economies over the years. They don't come out and openly recommend 250°F., because so few ovens are capable of holding uniformly at that temperature. They also hesitate to recommend any system that adds so much to the cooking time, for they are sure that women live primarily by time-saving standards.

So you will have to wrestle with your conscience and decide whether you want to save money and flavor more than you want to save time. The choice is obvious to a good cook.

I go the experts one better. I start my roasts in an absolutely stony-cold oven. I claim a cold start makes a big difference. The experts are not much impressed, and give me all kinds of logical-sounding reasons why it doesn't make much difference. But they seem not to have tried it, and I have. My roasts swell; theirs shrink. If sudden changes from very (Continued on page 204)

Make Christmas a rehearsal in good decorating

Here are 53 lighthearted ways to trim the house for Christmas. And you can turn this gay business to permanent profit if you make it a "practice run" in good decorating principles.

For big effects right now and self-confidence in the future, follow the maxims on these 12 pages

TWO PHOTOGRAPHS BY MAYNARD PARKER

Avoid clutter—despite the notion that Christmas is a mad, gay jumble. The rooms you remember are the ones where a few fine ornaments stand out. At the Garden of the Gods Club, Colorado Springs, just three perfect jeweled snowflakes from Austen Display accent the fireplace. Harry E. Francis, decorator.

Keep color controlled. Two or three good colors, carefully chosen and played to the hilt, pack a bigger wallop than a rainbow, and look even gayer because your eye can take them in. Decorator Warde Corley's two-color tree is a marriage of magenta Colorado carnations (in glass vials) and silver balls.

PHOTOGRAPH BY EZRA STOLLER

Scale it up! Large-scale ornaments become almost architecturally important, yet they actually simplify decorating motions. Powerfully handsome fireside hearts suggest a gargantuan project, but they're basically three simple Styrofoam units from Austen Display, scattered with William Streeter's foil stars. At Stowehof ski lodge, Stowe, Vt. Lawrence Hess, owner-architect.

Let architecture be your guide. Don't smother good architectural detail in a mulch of extraneous trimming. Make it the main event, and let its form and material determine whatever decoration you may add. At Stowehof, old timbers and vigorously textured stone seem to demand accents of glowing light and a hint of glitter—only that and nothing more. Tree lights, spiked like luminous little chestnut burrs, are strung through the stonework mortar grooves. Lights by Radiant Glass Fibers, courtesy of Lord & Taylor. "Porcupine" snowflake balls, Austen Display.

Think of the over-all scene. You can prove this ageless decorating axiom easily. Deck the halls with the first thing that comes to hand and see what you get! Or, before you choose your ornaments, give some study to the scale of their setting, its design character, the colors and patterns of other furnishings. That's what makes even such frivolities as Christmas balls and Styrofoam stars look inevitably "right" on the Stowehof stairway. They are also seen from outside, through the glass wall. Ornaments, Austen Display. Wrappings, Gift Wrappings, Inc.

Make your own traditions—and don't be timid about carrying out the decorative hunches you dream up yourself. See what holiday handsomeness you'd pass by if you dismissed as "too unconventional" the idea of spilling glitter balls out of coral. Coral, courtesy of McArthur Shop.

One wonderful, eye-smacking, beautiful thing packs far more wallop than a clutter of gimcracks. One great glittering star, like a piece of sculpture in golden foil, could dress a whole wall. Large-scale, ready-made ornaments give you lots for your money, make decorating a cinch. Courtesy of The Burkharts.

Choose a motif of your own, use it everywhere, make it the signature of Christmas in your family. It might be an angel, a star, a bird, a snowflake, a butterfly—whatever has beauty and meaning to you. Or borrow and adapt a traditional symbol from another land, like the dearly loved Scandinavian Christmas heart suggested to us by Gunhild Gansing Vohtz. Left, a woven paper basket to fill with lollipops and hang on a wall within reach of the young is a scaled-up copy of the small paper baskets the Danes make for the Christmas tree. (Page 193 tells how to do it.) Right, make or have made a heart-shaped wreath of greens stuck in Styrofoam. Stud it with silvery reminders that home is where the heart is—a tinsel nest, a pair of antique birds, a lantern. Boxwood wreath, courtesy of Judith Garden.

Respect the traditions without being a slave to them. Naturally, it wouldn't be Christmas without cookies, but give the cooky ritual an imaginative new twist. Make cooky copies of tree ornaments, frost them with color, and "serve" them from a star-spiked wooden tree. (We painted it black.) Tree, Jan Howell.

Observe light and shadow. There's no better time than Christmas to see how magically a room can be transformed by lighting. Jeweled plastic "firefly" tree lights twinkle on and off, flashing moving shadow. Courtesy of Lord and Taylor.

Avoid the obvious. Exercise your sense of subtlety. A tree might be an abstract shape of driftwood. Christmas "balls" may be oval pendants, softly colored in aquamarine, with a satiny sheen instead of a high dazzle. For fresh and unexpected color contrast—acid-yellow lemons. Ornaments, Allied Display Materials.

Make the whole house glow. New tree lights invite you to string them through mantel, doorway and stairway greens as well as through the tree. Above, Luma candles, courtesy Tora Holm. Below, colored blown glass whimsies, Zaria Displays.

Put house plants to work. Greenery is as good as furniture, if you use it adroitly. See how simply you can acquire a big splash of holiday nonsense by making a house plant blossom with balloons that are all aglint with Dennison star stickers. Glistening "beehive" straw basket, from Jan Howell.

Remember the mirror and all its artful ways of reflecting light and giving you double your money's worth. Just imagine the blaze of beauty you'd get if you trimmed a tree or adorned a dinner table with mirror baubles like this many-faceted apple. Courtesy Lord and Taylor.

Keep it personal—for what is the finest decorating worth without the human touch? Ask the sharers of your Christmas dinner to autograph the tablecloth, then make this your holiday cloth forever after. Use indelible ink. Or even embroider the markings between seasons.

PHOTOGRAPH BY GEORGE LAZARNICK

Make a lot of a little. By itself one small thing doesn't amount to much—whether it's a picture or a Christmas ball. But put a group of small objects together and you can get some pretty assertive, economical decoration, like the united glitter of greens and balls taped to a short wall.

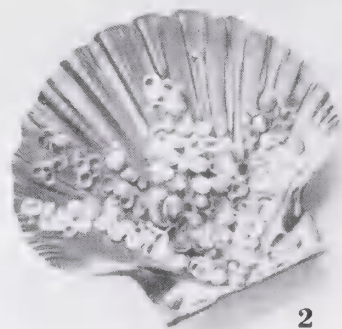

MAXYARD PARKER

Let ideas hit you. A giddy "gift horse" resulted when Mrs. S. Warner looked at a twisted manzanita root. Wearing a curl of copper wire, a pair of jeweled hatpins, and a necklace of gilded nuts, it holds a gift, naturally, in its mouth. San Francisco Museum of Art Christmas Show.

Any material goes. Just as long as it's lovely and does its job well. It's the same old thing for the same old purpose that makes hackneyed decorating. Christmas being the season of surprises, keep your mind and eyes open to the fresh delight of ornaments made of imagination and "unlikely" materials:

1. Gingerbread boy of copper screen and pearls.
2. Tinted seed shells on a gilded scallop shell. Both by Kate Scott.
3. A drawstring festoon of collapsible foil.
4. Tinsel pompons on a silver thread. Both by the Burkharts.
5. and 6. Eleanor Ward's fabulous baubles, frosted with coral or tailored with a velvet band.
7. Woodshavings tree, Brunn and Bertheim.
8. A froth of a tree made of gold-dusted cellophane sippers, from Florence Louise Kay.
9. Eleanor Ward's sentimental glitter ball, banded in valentine gilt paper.
10. A glass-enclosed candle dressed in gold lace, by Helene Cole, Inc.
11. David Willson's angels (upright and on sticks), born of corks, yarn spools, paper cups, Ping-Pong balls, what have you.
12. A gilded Christmas rose tree of milliners' leaves, pink buds, and tiny glitter beads, by Helen Cole, Inc.
13. A Styrofoam snowball spiked with gilded shells (make this one yourself).

Make it yourself.

Anything you make with your own two hands puts your personality into your home, gives you a sense of creative accomplishment. Lots of us are timid about this, fearful of the "loving hands at home" look. But, just for fun, try out your creative talents on Christmas trimmings. This project could be a family affair, for youngsters, given a little direction, can be quite dexterous. (On page 194 see some things they can make by themselves). Here are trims you can whip up of ribbon, foil, or paper. Most of it is kindergarten stuff, but you get professional-looking results if you use smart color and keep the scale big. Top: Make tree garlands of ribbons or foil paper in "cat's ladder" folds, or with ribbon looped to look like spun sugar candy. Center: three cut-out strips of folded foil assemble into a gleaming star. Bottom: Trim a tree with link chain festoons, ribbon-bow wreaths, ovals, rounds, and hearts of coiled ribbon. We show you how to do these things on page 190.

Do something different. Any time you give one of your own ideas a fling, you are freeing yourself from the ranks of the conformists who let their tastes be stifled by the opinions of others. It mightn't be conventional but wouldn't it be fun to give a Christmas picnic, for grown-ups or children, with baskets of supper and favors under the tree? Or trim your tree-trimming ladder and keep it on display to hold gifts.

Go giddy on occasion with something that amuses the eye and provokes conversation. At Christmas parties, Patricia Easterbrook Roberts's jingle-bell wreath, worn by the hostess or given as a favor to the lady guests, is the kind of pretty nonsense that adds decoration, delights the company, breaks the ice.

Be practical—and you needn't be dull about it. The market is loaded with glamour ornaments that won't break, don't need to be fussed with, can fold or collapse, and store in little space. A practical holiday hostess can enhance the décor and protect her dress in apron of gilt-striped tarlatan, or sleek black vinyl plastic, scalloped in pink felt and tassels and tied with a velvet ribbon.

There are more ways than one to do everything, including the Christmas tree. If you can't have a spruce or a hemlock, just open your mind to such gay and space-saving variations as these; all from the San Francisco Museum of Art Christmas Show, all suggesting that you make them yourself: "Blue Triangle," built of slim wood dowels and Tinker Toy balls spiked with brightly beaded pins; an airy cone of gilded chicken wire, its meshes filled with gold balls in graduated sizes, designed by Phoebe Brown; a "pagoda" tree of wood coat hangers nailed to a central support, lacquered red, and hung with gold balls, designed by Herbert Raynaud.

Train your eye to do more than examine the detailed pattern in what you see. Learn to evaluate the over-all pattern made by the curved or angular form of any object. The curved line of a tie-back drapery, suggesting a festoon, inspired this simple, striking decoration—a showy fringe of easily attached Christmas balls.

Practice asymmetry—no easy order, for off-center arrangements call for a design-conscious eye. Try your hand at it by scattering stars on a mirror. Foil stars. The Burkharths. Swedish straw stars. Jan Howell. Furniture by Dunbar.

Improvise and experiment with things around you. Your ideas may sound dizzy to other people, but try them yourself before you give up. Typical successful experiment—a collar of glitter balls on a lamp. Lamp by Bradley Mfg. Co.

Make much of what you have.

Don't gild the lily by adding ornament where it's not needed. Opposite, color of James Kemble Mills's wallpaper speaks for itself. Hanging honeycomb-paper finials from Austen Display merely underline its dramatic pattern, which was actually inspired by Bill Brewer's wrought-iron sconces. The finials fold flat.

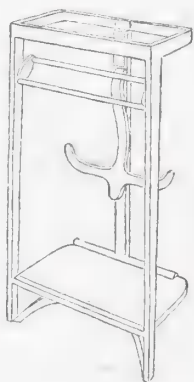

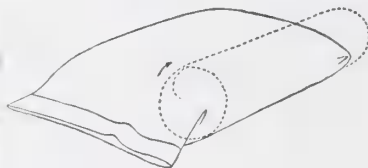

A living-room corner can be an inconspicuous "guest room." Sofa is a Chinese-inspired k'ang, with loose foam rubber mattress over full springs. From The McGuire Co. Sketch shows how you can roll a slim, full-size foam rubber "Playtex" pillow cylindrically, give it a tubular slipcover, and disguise it as a round bolster. ## "Plan to spend the night"

Christmas is the big season for these warm-hearted last words. This year, when the old friends, visiting kinfolk, and children's classmates arrive, here's how to bed them down in guest-room comfort, even if you're short on space

It's accepted modern practice to put up your guests in the same room the family usually uses as den or study—but with greater amenities than they'd enjoy in many an old-fashioned guest room. Along a 130-inch wall, De Gaal and Walker's antiqued fruitwood-finish unit frames a boxspring-and-mattress daybed, besides providing bureau, cupboard, bookshelf, desk space.

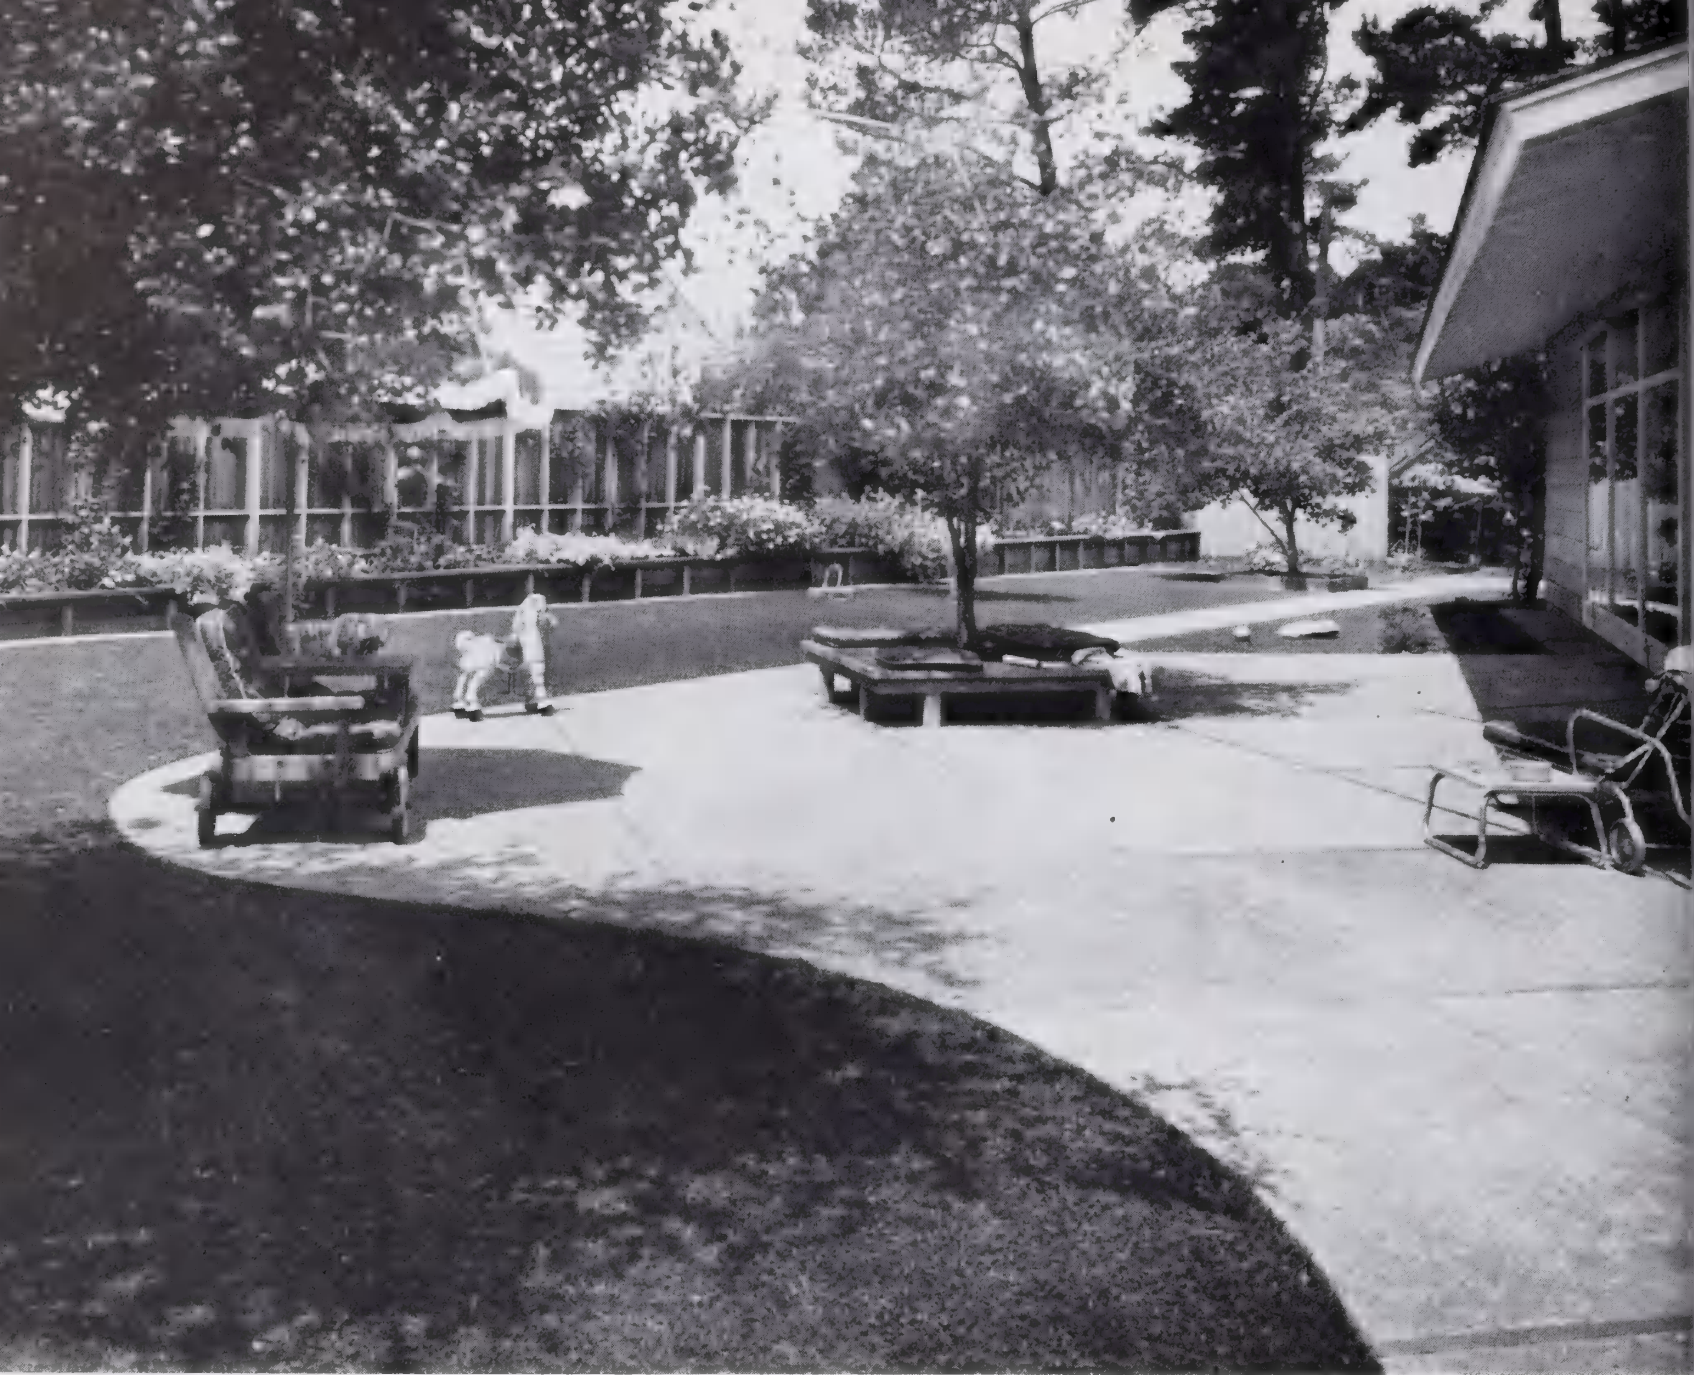

What makes a guest comfortable? A good bed, a real pillow (and a place to prop it), an effective bedlight, room to store belongings, a mirror, a place to write. The last three are combined in Swedish Modern's Danish-made teak secretary-chest-vanity. Pin-up lamp by Lightolier can be raised or lowered, its distance from wall can be regulated, its light can pivot to any angle. Shade is splatted wood.

A sofa can sleep two people. Sketch shows how Englander's Airfoam trundle bed slides out to do this. Two mahogany coffee tables and a sectional chest from Unagusta Mfg. Co. can unite to give a guest a bureau, a luggage rack, and a night table. Amelia Earhart houndstooth luggage. Lamp with brass megaphone shades, by Eagle Skandia.

As hostess to the overnights, take advantage of the fact that things are not always what they seem. A room divider separating a sleeping sofa from the rest of a room not only gives a guest privacy but cupboard and shelf space as well. Fact is that the walnut divider here, by Mount Airy Chair Co., is an open bookcase set on a buffet. Buffet opens on both sides. Add casters, and the bookcase is a tea cart. Swiveling umbrella lamp, by Lightolier.

Extend your family living to the lot line

Have you looked outside your house for the extra living space you would like to have? Without making a single change in the house itself you can double or triple the living space by converting your garden into a big, roofless living room just outside the house walls.

Christmas is a wonderful time to decide upon this move. There will be just about the right amount of time between now and spring for your landscape architect to plan your new garden "room" before the nurseryman must start construction and planting.

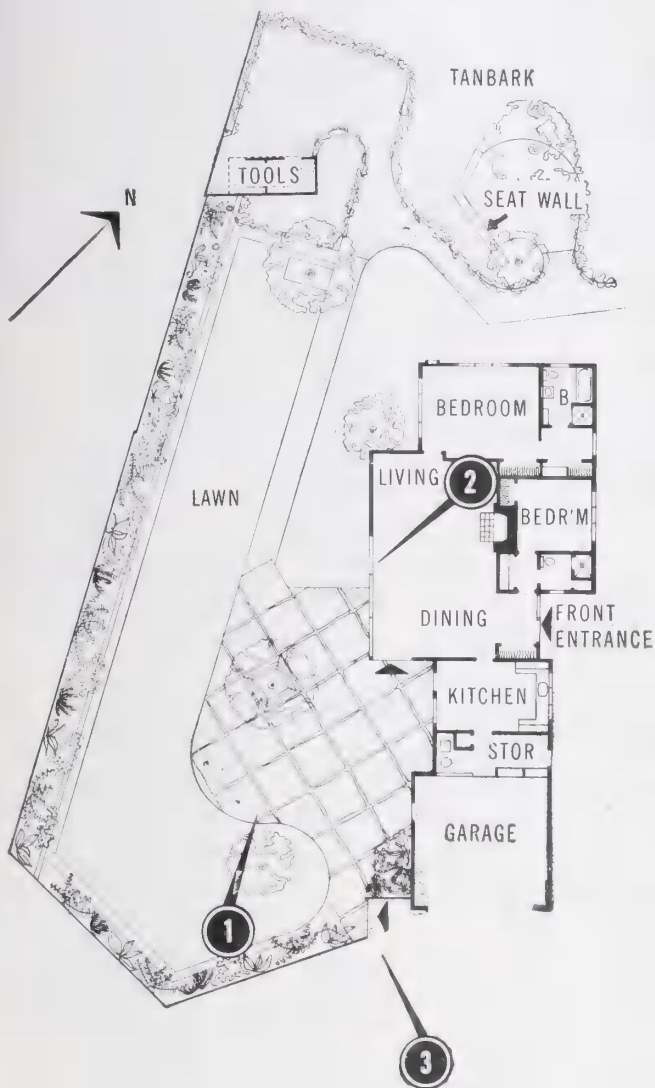

Skillful planning will insure you as much privacy and comfort as you now enjoy indoors, plus the luxury of sunshine and fresh air.

The B. S. Berrys were well aware of this. When they built their present home in 1949 they considered the whole lot as their house, but they roofed over only a small area. Experience has confirmed the wisdom of their idea. (Continued on page 152)

1. Brushed-aggregate concrete paving is non-slippery, easy to clean. Odd shape was conceived by landscape architect to make yard seem larger. "Boxing" around tree furnishes seating space in this outdoor room.

2. Paving is at same level as indoor floor. Fences insure privacy for garden. (Hedges would have been as effective.) Flowers are confined to boundaries for lowest upkeep and greatest spaciousness.

3. Baffle entrance eliminates bother of opening gates, cuts off view to and from indoor living room, makes the high fence appear less forbidding. Fence is simple to build, offers interesting construction pattern to owner inside and passerby outside.

Extend your family living to the lot line continued

Raised plant bed protects flowers from lawn games, displays them at eye level, makes tending easy. Fence insures wind protection, reflects sunlight and heat. Concrete mowing edge between bed and lawn eliminates need for hand trimming.

Dwarf fruit trees espaliered against south-facing fence grow remarkably well, require very little space, and cast highly decorative shadows. Plants below are the hardy variegated English ivy.

The roofless part of the house is the most-used space, and family living really does extend to the lot lines. This servantless family now enjoys the spaciousness of a house that otherwise would require a squad of servants to maintain.

If you now have the usual high-upkeep kind of garden, you may wonder how smart it would be to add all the traffic and wear of continuous use as a living room. You may worry, too, about off-seasons that could discourage use of the garden in daily living. Right here is where planning the useful garden—extending family living to the lot line—departs from the “looking” garden. If you plan your garden as a room, and use plants to help create and decorate its structure, nature becomes your decorator instead of your master. You deliberately subordinate plant needs to your own needs. You use only plants that stay presentable, that need no fussy care, that please you by their daily presence in your life. Obviously your garden won't resemble the traditional kind. Certainly the Berry garden doesn't. But would a comfortable big room like theirs solve your space problems? (Continued on page 216)

Housekeepers are people

The following 14 pages continue last month's story of House Beautiful's 1953 Pace Setter house, and demonstrate the Pace Setter's attitude toward work and those who do the work in the modern home

Housekeepers are people continued

Housekeepers, like any other working members of a prosperous and expanding society, can and will choose their places of employment not only in terms of wages and hours, but increasingly according to the over-all living conditions. The price of domestic servants in an industrial and fully-employed America is high. The cost of this very presentable maid's room in labor and furnishings was $1,340.85.

The house, however, benefits as much as the housekeeper. Here is a room that maintains the high standards of comfort and convenience throughout the rest of the Pace Setter. Should there be no need for sleep-in help, it can easily become a guest room, extra study, sick room, or another child's room. It is planned to provide for sociability and relaxation, for reading, music, letter writing, and a personal view of a private garden which is an outside sitting room.

Above all else, it gives the person who occupies such a room, whether housekeeper or guest, an individual and well-planned place, attractive and dignified.

The housekeeper's room, like every room in the Pace Setter, has a vista. But, more important, here the housekeeper boasts her own garden and terrace, separate from the family's, for her private enjoyment and entertaining. If for no other reason, such thoughtful planning means a happy housekeeper and therefore a happy house.

This small (9' by 10') room is made to seem bigger with a small, delicate pattern of green fern wallpaper and matching chintz. The textured carpet is fortified for carefree wear with Fibre E. Sectional furniture provides maximum storage, seating and desk space in the area of the corner window yet uses minimum floor space.

Floor in this room is a vinyl plastic tile, sure to have a long, carefree existence. It can be kept immaculate with soap and water; it's a cool flooring in summer, makes a flattering border for small winter carpet. Olive-toned Fibre E carpet, product of a new technology, is a blend of two lustrous man-made fibres. Adding further to the durable good looks of this room are washable cotton bed cover and ferny chintz bedskirt. Three-sided open-work metal table is one of a set of two that makes a square.

At night, bed extends to full width when rolled out from under bookshelves. Rubber wheels attached to box spring make for easy mobility, free both sides of bed for easy making. Mattress of foam rubber insures good sleep, is light to handle. Clock radio, books, reading light are close at hand. Blanket and sheets are of same fine quality used throughout house. Such amenities exemplify the democratic attitude toward all members of the household.

The PACE SETTER KITCHEN

This kitchen was designed around people. Real people. People with a perception of, and a sensitivity to, the social and economic forces of the time we live in. Their observations led them to believe that real family living is one of the most important solutions to the confusing problems of our time. And that, of all rooms, the kitchen, where the modern housewife spends much of her day, should serve as a family center, making a real contribution to the health, happiness, and serenity of the entire household.

To make it a family center in the most embracing sense requires the fulfillment of three basic concepts. 1. The kitchen should incorporate esthetic qualities for emotional satisfaction and pleasure. 2. It should offer the best mechanical aids available to turn could-be-drudgery into creative enjoyment. 3. It should satisfy individual personality traits, involving work habits and food tastes.

The following pages show how these basic ideas were developed to make this kitchen a servant of better living for the whole family.

Beautiful woods, calm colors and textures, sunlight and shadow combine to make the breakfast area of the kitchen as fine, decoratively speaking, as any other area in the house. Though intended basically for hurried breakfasts and off-hour snacks, it has a dignity of its own which makes it adaptable for both informal entertaining and daily living, whatever the hour, season, or weather outside.

The vast variety of materials of all sorts available in the market today offers a unique opportunity for free choice. Wood, steel, plastic, cotton, vinyl tile live harmoniously together, contributing in their individual ways to both beauty and practicality. It is this combination of qualities which permits each family a high degree of selectivity to express its own personality.

TWO PHOTOGRAPHS BY MAYNARD PARKER

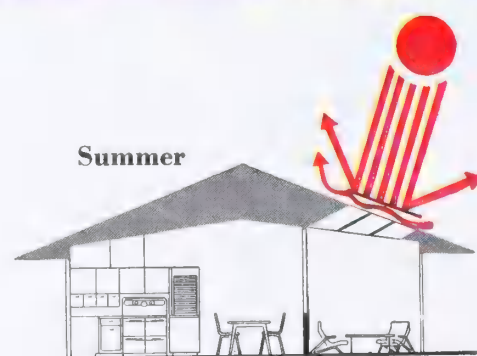

To most people a feeling of spaciousness contributes much to ease of work. The Pace Setter kitchen over all is large, about 13' x 16'. But most food preparation goes on in the compact area above, small enough to be step-saving, yet so generously endowed with counters that it never gets cluttered, no matter what procedure is in progress.

THE PACE SETTER KITCHEN continuedHow to make a north room sunny in winter, shaded and cool in summer

Louvered skylight in roof of the Pace Setter screened terrace is neatest Climate Control trick of the year. In winter it brings sun into the kitchen, which is primarily a north-facing room (because its south windows are under the porch). Yet in summer no direct sun enters either porch or kitchen, thanks to carefully calculated angle of the louvers. In addition, a "summer sash" of heat-stopping glass, put on a few inches above the skylight, dissipates rest of skylight heat.

PHOTOGRAPH BY EZRA STOLLER

By September 21st, the sun is just beginning to enter the skylight. This photograph above, taken October 1st, shows sun beginning to brighten up the kitchen wall. By October 15th, direct rays are beginning to shine into kitchen, shown on sketch, left. Compare sun patterns on porch floor.

Winter

In winter, when the sun moves low in the sky, louvers of the skylight are correctly angled to let sun penetrate fully into north side of kitchen. From October to April 15th, kitchen, which is essentially a north-facing room, turns into a sunny southern room. It shows how you can accomplish miracles by knowing how to manipulate the facts about comfort.

For more details about this screened terrace, see page 177

If you were sitting at this breakfast table in the winter, sunshine coming through the louvered skylight in the terrace roof would look like the picture above. Note the beautiful grain of the walnut breakfast table top, an example of the new emphasis on texture which lets the natural wood itself create the design, rather than any applied pattern.

To avoid head bangs, wall cabinet doors lift up, are counter-weighted to stay open. Top of cabinet is 6'6" from floor, lower than usual, for easy reaching. Under-wall cabinets with drop-down doors add storage space.

In a long, rambling house, one room wide, the out-of-doors is never out of sight. Wide windows in the kitchen, as elsewhere, provide a peaceful view of trees and shrubbery, and generously distribute light and air.

Problems this kitchen had to solve

- It had to perform to meet the diversified needs of a commuting father, a mother-of-all-work, and two young children.
- to be handsome, since the family insists on beauty everywhere in their home for their own satisfaction.
- to be easy to maintain, since the lady-of-the-house and one maid double and triple in cooking, serving, cleaning, nursing.
- to have child-proof, use-proof, and easy-to-clean materials for floors, counters, curtains, everything, to meet meticulous standards of cleanliness without drudgery.
- to be accessible to living room, dining room, and porch, in any one of which meals are likely to be served.
- to have generous counter space for spreading out food and serving pieces for frequent informal parties.
- to be big enough for the "crowd" to end up in, as it often wants to do in suburban living.
- to have a big commissary for canned and dry foods to spare the busy mother of young children frequent trips to market.
- to have a freezer with cooked and ready-to-cook food on hand at all times for unexpected guests, the rule in this household rather than the exception.
- to have a multi-use pantry, a sort of kitchen annex where flowers can be arranged, children's trays prepared, or drinks mixed without interfering with meal preparation.
- to have a good laundry, since children make mountains of soiled clothes; and in a location where it would not interfere with other kitchen activities.
- to be planned logically, so work would flow smoothly, with or without a maid; and with tools and supplies located as near as possible to the place of use.
- to include every mechanical device which would make for the amenities of civilized living with the least possible fuss and fury.
- to have an attractive, serene place in which to eat, even when meals have to be hurried.
- to serve as a real center for the best family life.

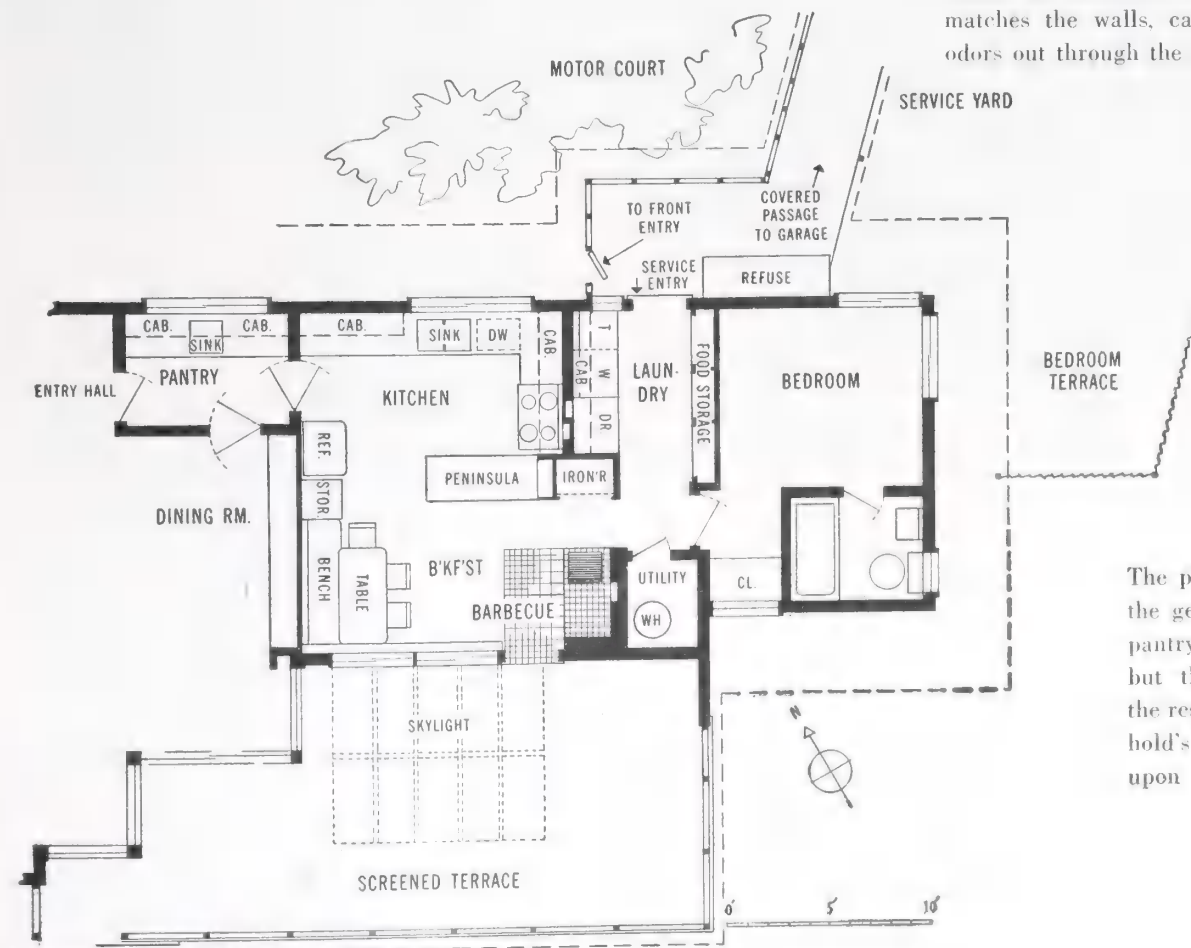

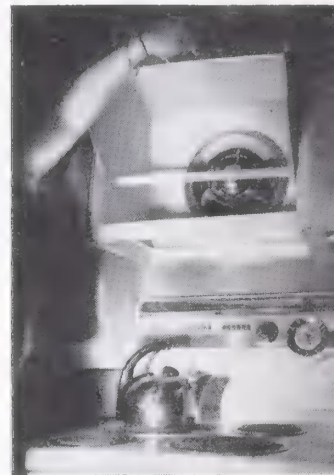

Double-armed towel bars on sink fronts keep towels always within reach without waste motion. Dishes go from dishwasher to their allotted place in adjacent cabinets, sized to accommodate frequently used items.

A ventilator installed in a cabinet directly over range draws off cooking odors, steam, and grease at the source. A metal duct concealed by plywood which matches the walls, carries odors out through the roof.

The plan at the left shows not only the general arrangement of kitchen, pantry, laundry, and breakfast area, but their geographical relation to the rest of house. Much of any household's successful operation depends upon good inter-relation like this.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY MAYNARD PARKER

There is no reason why all kitchen equipment and all storage cabinets should be lined up against walls, as has been standard practice for many years. A low peninsula, at right angles to one wall, has the advantage of increasing counter and storage space, and letting you work on more than one side of it. Here, it also serves as a sort of divider between the kitchen area proper and the area for eating or just relaxing. The top of the tall section, shown open and closed, houses bulky, seldom-used utensils, while the ironer is stored below. Doors on both sides of the low part permit access to sliding pot-and-pan shelves from either side. A waste basket for daily accumulation of burnable refuse, and a receptacle for food wastes not accommodated by the disposer in the sink also can be removed from either side. The big counter is indispensable added work space.

At right angles to the range and within arm's reach of it, peninsula drawers and sliding shelves hold most of the cutlery and pots and pans likely to be used in cooking. A wide variety of seasonings and spices, used for the most part at the range, is conveniently located on shallow shelves behind a folding tambour door. The two views below show the ironing board and ironer drawn out from their "garages" into the free space near the breakfast table. Here one can sit comfortably and work in good light, surrounded by fresh air and pleasant views of the enclosed porch and open terrace beyond.

To eliminate unnecessary time and motion, the laundry is arranged as a production line. Laundry tub is at the far right, then the electric washer, next the electric dryer. A plastic laminate cover over the three units is partially fitted with piano hinges to fold back out of the way when tub or washer is in use. When in place, it's a generously large sorting counter or unloading spot for deliveries.

Stain removers, bleaches, bluing, starch, soaps, and detergents are stored at hand in cabinets above the laundry equipment. The two knobs showing on the lower shelf wall control supply lines of hot and cold water for the washer. By concealing them within the cabinet and recessing the flexible rubber supply hoses out of sight, the installation has that professional look, much to be desired, not always attained.

Ventilator over the range and vent from dryer both exhaust through the roof. Ducts for each, separate but side by side, are enclosed within plywood shaft separating kitchen from laundry.

Section of the over-all kitchen, yet apart from it, a complete laundry and extensive commissary have their own area backed up to the kitchen proper, and conveniently accessible from the back entry

It's old-fashioned to market more than once a week. Today's refrigerators and freezers take care of perishable foods. The food industry has developed a tremendous variety of "will-keep" packaged foods. To take advantage of these facilities, the Pace Setter kitchen has banks of adjustable shelves for its own private grocery store, enough for a big inventory.

Tip-forward bins built under the commissary provide a place for soiled laundry to accumulate until there is a load big enough for the washer across the aisle from them. With two bins, you can sort clothes by color and fiber as they go into the hamper without having to re-sort them when you are ready to put them into the washer—another time-saving bit of planning.

Many small chores can be accomplished in the pantry without interfering with kitchen work, since it's accessible also from front hall and adjacent dining room.

In a suburban household where informal entertaining is the rule, there's nothing more appreciated by the man of the house than a place where he can mix drinks in his own way, without confusion. In the pantry, storage space is provided for everything he needs, all in one spot. He can serve equally well to near-by living room, porch, or terrace.

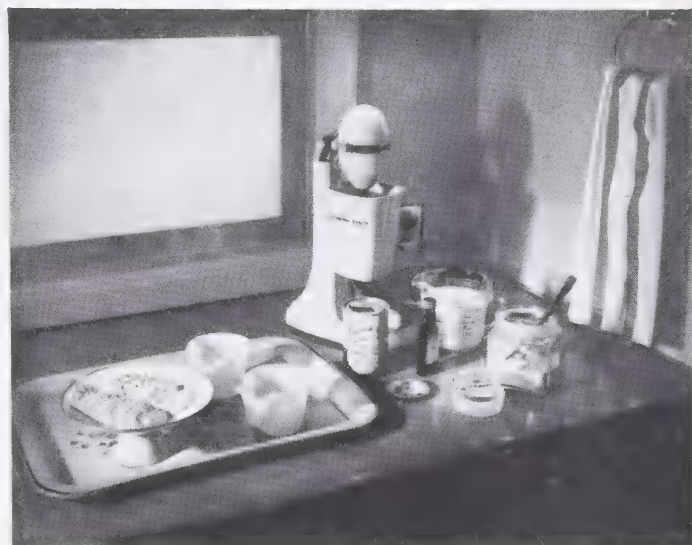

The pantry window is proportioned to let in light and air, without sacrificing wall space which can be better utilized for storage cabinets. Obscure glass permits privacy when the window is closed, a consideration because of the fact that the pantry is on the entrance side of the house. Fluorescent lights under wall cabinets illuminate counter.

Vital to the pace-setting quality of the kitchen is the suitability of materials for the specific construction requirements of the house and for the easy maintenance upon which the owners insisted. Birch plywood walls are waxed to resist soil. Vinyl plastic asbestos tile is safe to install on the concrete sub-floor. It is resilient under foot, durable, unaffected by moisture and grease, is easily cared for with soap and water. Plastic work-counters are continuous sheets of resin-impregnated laminations, welded together under heat and pressure. Boiling water, hot grease, alcohol, normal household chemicals do not harm them, and they wipe clean with a damp cloth. Stainless steel sinks do not discolor, chip, rust, or stain. Steel cabinets are finished to order with washable enamel to meet the requirements of the color scheme. Curtains are all-cotton percale, which washes and irons as easily as a handkerchief.

The pantry is also a wonderful place to fix the little extras young children often need between meals. Fruit juice or milk shakes can be mixed here without disturbing kitchen routine. As they grow older, children can serve themselves here.

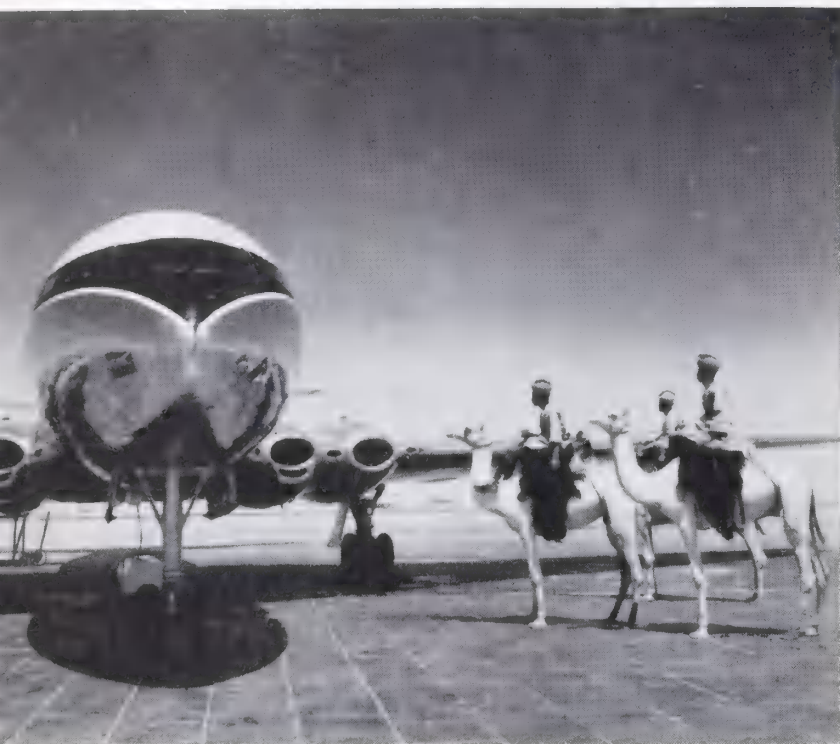

In a big house in the country, flowers everywhere are a part of the décor. So one part of the pantry is reserved for flower arranging. Flowers can be plunged directly into the sink, then arranged on the counter. A wide variety of vases and holders is always at hand.

Two drawers in the pantry are fitted with custom-built inserts for flat silver. A minimum amount of polishing is assured by dividers to keep pieces of silver classified and prevent them from scratching each other, and by lining and covering flaps of tarnish-resistant cloth.

You can travel to an unspoiled, almost prehistoric world on the fastest, smoothest airliner known to man—BOAC's jetliner "The Comet." It is really traveling back in time, for East Africa is the world as it was before man came and upset the balance of nature.

Elephant country lies at the foot of Mt. Kilimanjaro, snow-covered the year round, and the background for the latest safari movie, The Snows of Kilimanjaro. Before you go, sample your trip with this and the five earlier movies which were made in Africa.

Fly back to the

It sounds fantastic—you in Africa! It's not. BOAC will fly you there from London in a Constellation, or the super-comfortable Hermes, or even in the world's (as yet) only jet airline service. Think of it! In less than one day from London, which is only overnight from New York, you can be on the equator and clear out of this world, deep in the forest in the moonlight, watching the elephants play!

That's the main reason for going to East Africa. (There are lots of others, of course.) But the wild animals make it worth the trip. Seeing how the world looked before man got mixed up in the balance of nature is a staggering experience. East Africa has more wild animal country than any other place in the world. And East Africa is organized to make it easy to see their country and their animals. You can see them the easy way in the National Park. Or you can see them on safari—the shooting or the photographic variety. Or you can see them by moonlight from the high security of a treetop house.

About this most exciting part of Africa, British East Africa, I know some secrets—secrets to most Americans, secrets that, if explained, would send lots of people scurrying to see what I've seen:

1. It's not hot. There is no "steaming jungle." On the coast, palm trees lean out over the tropical beaches, fanned

Safari life is incredibly luxurious. You live in what amounts

Garden of Eden: EAST AFRICA

By Priscilla Langewiesche who just got back by a warm moist breeze. Inland, the country is high (from four to eight thousand feet) and dry; brown and bare; spectacularly beautiful in the style of New Mexico, with snow-capped mountains—Mt. Kilimanjaro and Mt. Kenya, both of them higher than anything we have in the United States. The days are warm and sunny and dry. Nights cold. Warm underwear is a must. On the equator! (Remember, the British keep their hotels and homes chilly.)

2. It's not unhealthy. The worst you may get is a slight trouble with your insides, same as in traveling almost anywhere. There are now pills that will stop all such nonsense quickly. Against malaria, you start taking preventive pills a week before you leave home. Even if you don't, the airline gives them to you with full instructions. They are no longer quinine: they don't make your ears ring or your skin yellow or anything. As for sleeping sickness, tropical ulcers, and all the rest—just forget about them.

3. It's not an "expedition." Tourists are now big business. Nairobi, metropolis of East Africa, and capital of Kenya Colony, has two first-rate hotels: the New Stanley and the Norfolk. Kenya has a specialty: small country hotels that offer not merely the comforts of home, but also the luxury—the Mawingo at Nanyuki, the Outspan in Nyeri, the Brackenhurst, and the Brown Trout.

4. It's not expensive. At these country hotels, a lovely room with bath and fireplace, plus meals for two persons, costs $10 to $15 a day. Stay a month and they cut the rate in half! You can't afford to come home.

East Africa consists of four Territories: Kenya, Zanzibar, Tanganyika, Uganda. Of these, the first two are the most interesting and pleasant, and Kenya (pronounced keen-yah) most of all.

The two main things to see are animals and people. The beautiful scenery is always there as background. Of art treasures and important architecture, you won't find much. But, oh, those wild animals!

East Africa has the largest concentration of the greatest assortment of the most beautiful animals in the world: antelopes, gazelles, zebras, giraffes; lions, cheetahs, leopards, hyenas; hippos, rhinos, elephants, buffalo, to mention some. And I don't mean just a few of each. I've seen vast plains literally covered with herds of grazing animals. And in two days, just cruising in a car, I once saw 36 lions.

There are three ways to see those animals. First, in the National Parks. One Park is just outside Nairobi—and I do mean just that—there's a fence to keep the lions from straying into town. You simply hire a car with native driver and spend an afternoon (Continued on page 202) to a mobile hotel, with three servants for each of you.

Keeping the fun in the family

By Albert A. Ostrow

We'd learn our sums with nuts and plums,

Then eat them one by one."

Today this children's rhyme of years ago sounds like something out of another world, when you consider the changes that have taken place in the family picture. If yours is the average home, the wonders of this mechanical age have greatly lessened your work in the kitchen and made things more comfortable about the house generally. But the chances are they have also been allowed to take over one job of labor-saving they simply are not suited for. And that is putting bounce and warmth into family living.

Modern parents have often been charged—and unfairly, I think—with placing their own pleasures and interests above those of their children. If they have anything to answer for, it is not lack of love or good intentions, but that they do too many things for their children and not nearly enough with them. Nowhere does that show up more than in the average parent's attitude toward his play relationship with his children.

Take the Carter household, for example. Joe Carter is a rising executive. Ruth is his helpmeet in the full sense of the word. She can talk understandingly to him about his job. She has learned to play a decent game of bridge because it is one of his favorite relaxations, and she sees to it his energies aren't undermined by late hours at outside parties or home entertainment. They are in the thick of community affairs. They are hep to what's going on in the world. A more aware and active couple you couldn't expect to meet. Nor could you find more indulgent parents, either. Just let the children—seven-year old Peggy and nine-year old Rick—ask for anything within reason and it's theirs. Usually Ruth and Joe don't even wait to be asked. But see how the (Continued on page 213)

At Last! MUSIC REPRODUCTION WHICH DOES FULL JUSTICE TO MODERN RECORDING PERFECTION

If you've been listening to MODERN LP records on today's ordinary record-playing equipment, you're depriving yourself of at least half their beauty.

The great conductor, Leopold Stokowski, willingly accepted Stromberg-Carlson's invitation to test its new "Custom Four Hundred" high-fidelity equipment. These are his conclusions:

"For discriminating music lovers who wish to hear great music in its full beauty, I can recommend with confidence the Stromberg-Carlson reproducer, which I have thoroughly tested.

"It has a single stylus with diamond pick-up and long, light tone arm which reduces distortion to a minimum—a 25-watt amplifier and a pre-amplifier that incorporates the latest technical knowledge—and a 15" speaker with large enclosure.

"All these features create a reproducer of high quality that will give full musical satisfaction to the discerning music lover."

Feeding two small boys is no problem when there is a pleasant place for their meals, well lighted and aired by big windows looking out on the screened terrace. High chairs with sturdy steel legs, removable trays and safety straps, keep the youngsters comfortable and safe. There is plenty of room in the breakfast area for mother's chair.

THE proof of the pudding is in the eating, they say. But you can't always tell, by eating, what ingredients have gone into its making. In the same way, the proof of a pace-setting house is in the way it looks and lives. But you can't tell what makes it look and live so well, unless you know what ingredients have gone into it. That is the reason you will enjoy reading the following list of materials and equipment selected for the Pace Setter kitchen. It will guide you to equally successful planning in your own home.

Comfort Control in Every Room

"Thermostatic controls in every room let us select the temperature."

"My room gets warm in a hurry with Thermador."

...with Thermador Electric Heating...

Individual thermostats and circulating fans in Thermador electric room heaters solve the problem of even temperature control. They do away with hot and cold spots, allow you to select the temperature you want in each room. Thermador heaters are easy to plan, inexpensive to install because they do away with ducts, flues, vents and central heating plants. You can locate them under windows, out of the way of furniture, anywhere you like. They provide maximum heating efficiency because you heat only the rooms you want heated. Because they're electric they give the cleanest, safest heat of all. In summer, the circulating fan used alone provides air circulation through every room in the house.

Head-to-Heels Comfort in the Bathroom

You need quick, extra heat in the bathroom when you step out of the shower. A flick of the switch on a Thermador radiant type head-to-heels heater floods you with instant warmth. A trademark of fine homes, they add such a little to the cost — so much to your comfort.

Thermador for Modern Cooking, Too

The famous electric Bilt-in Range, originated by Thermador makes true kitchen planning possible. Install cooking top, oven and griddle separately, at the right height and location for maximum convenience. Stainless steel surfaces blend with any finish. Fully automatic electric cooking is clean, cool and convenient.

stirrers for a demitasse or to set in a mug of buttered rum. They're wonderful, too, as a seasoning for a compote of canned nectarines.

21. Nothing adds so much fresh flavor as freshly ground black pepper. Start the holiday with plenty of pepper mills and every one of them in working condition. As an appetizer de luxe, serve paper-thin Italian prosciutto, or Smithfield ham, with fresh green figs and plenty of pepper from the mill.

22. Endow yourself, if not your dearest competitors, with a salt mill, and the Malden salt crystals to go in it. This extra savory crystalline salt is the thing with crisp raw vegetable hors d'oeuvres—the classic accompaniment to boiled beef and pot au feu.

23. Another grater you simply must have grinds the whole nutmeg. Use it as your forefathers did to fleck the eggnog or Tom and Jerry. Surprising, but truly wonderful is a fresh grating of nutmeg on split pea soup or sweet potatoes.

24. Nuts, all kinds of nuts, most of them in their shells, look so inviting around the house, especially if the bowls are wooden and lined with waxy green leaves.

25. Revive the old English custom of Port or Madeira served after dinner, along with paper-shelled pecans from Georgia, gargantuan California walnuts, Brazil nuts or butternuts.

26. Replace the hackneyed cherry in a Manhattan cocktail with a filbert which the Europeans call hazelnut. You'll never return to the cherry routine.

27. Instead of fussy appetizers, serve warm, toasted salted nuts. Those you bring home from the store can taste wonderfully home-made, if you'll sprinkle them lightly with salad oil. Heat in the oven or in a heavy frying pan on top of the stove. Watch like a hawk, for nuts brown and burn quickly.

28. Since the days of the Wise Men, almonds have belonged to the Christmas celebration. You'll want them au naturel in the shell, toasted and salted, and now you can have them also buttered, roasted, and diced, or blanched and slivered. Keep tightly covered in a can. Now it's no trick to serve string beans, asparagus, or mashed potatoes, amandine.

29. Chestnuts, of course! Roast them in wire poppers over the fire or place them on your charcoal grill and serve with drinks. And don't forget that this year you can get them in a jar, already shelled, peeled, and cooked.

30. Ready-made hard sauce and bottled eggnog—brighten them with spice and liquors, lighten with cream and eggs—to serve cold with steamy puddings, to serve hot or drained, well-chilled fruits, or pass with your favorite ice-cream cake.

31. Indulge yourself with imported marzipan, shaped and colored like all the fruits and vegetables of Eden. Use them for an edible centerpiece stuck on a little plastic tree, or even more interestingly, place them on bare twigs and surround with glossy leaves.

32. In beautifully decorated tins from Holland, Germany, and Switzerland you will find lebkuchen, honigkuchen and pfeffernusse. Offer them with a glass of wine instead of a highball in the evening.

33. Gingerbread men and horse bells and houses abound in the foreign delicatessens. Best of all, decorations for the Christmas tree or the buffet table.

34. To dunk in a cup of hot chocolate or sweet wine, there should be anise drops and the Italian sweetened rusks, which are called biscotti.

35. Even if you didn't get a visit to a Swedish shop for the cinnamon-flecked butter cookies, thin and rich that you scarcely dare touch them.

36. Sesame is a magic word and sesame seeds are the magic flavor in Charleston's delicious little Benne cakes now available all over the country in fine food stores.

37. When you think of spice and brandied fruits, don't stop with peaches, but remember brandied pears as well, greengage plums and dates in rum or brandy.

38. This is one season of the year when you will want luxurious whole unpitted fruits that come in cans—apricots, plums, peaches, and delicate nectarines. Serve them as compotes, chilled or heated, alone or in combination with or without "spike."

39. Cranberries should be in the freezer this year as well as in jars or tins. Don't neglect the whole berry sauce. Combine it with canned apple sauce, add a dash of lemon or grated orange peel. A worthy accompaniment to a crown roast pork.

40. Vary the cranberry routine by serving preserved lingon berries which are the Scandinavian version thereof. They're tinier than our

41. When the chestnut becomes a marron, lusciously preserved in vanilla, scented syrup, there is nothing better over ice cream or to combine with whipped cream and freeze into a mousse.

42. Place a platter of nuts, dates, figs, and raisins before your guests and you're going back to the Middle Ages when these were known as the Four Friars or Four Mendicants—tidbits gathered together for the traveling monks at the end of baronial feasts. Still an excellent thought!

43. Order large Sultana raisins that come packaged in clusters on their own grape stems. Place on a heat-proof platter in the center of the table. Pour on warmed rum or brandy. Set the liquor afire and you have The Snapdragon of Merrie Old England. The idea is to snatch as many raisins as you can. "Who gets the most is luckiest."

45. Augment your stock of dessert wines for the Christmas festivities. In addition to sherries, pale and dark, dry and sweet, you will want fine Madeira, and old Bual, Italian Marsala, white, ruby, and tawny ports, and that queen of all sweet wines—the golden, clear Tokay.

47. Dramatize your holiday menus with foods aflame. It is a custom that dates back to the Druids. For flambé foods you must have brandy on hand, Cognac or fruit brandies, rum or Bourbon. Choose the one that will give to the finished dish the most appropriate savor. Spirits for this use need not be extremely old, but must be well flavored, with no off-taste—at least 80 proof.

48. But why confine dramatic blazes to the plum pudding, when all kinds of dishes from soup to demitasse may be served flambé?

49. Soupe à l'Oignon Flamboy-

ante—it's canned or dehydrated onion soup prepared according to package directions with an added touch of meat glaze for richness. At the table, ladle the soup over crouttes of French bread well rubbed with garlic, toasted in the oven, and set ablaze with a spoonful of brandy.

50. Be noble with leftovers—turkey, chicken, lamb, or beef. Make of them a Petite Marmite Henry IV. Combine meats cut into thickish slices, with canned condensed, undiluted consommé and/or chicken broth, and a variety of lightly cooked vegetables such as cauliflower, carrots, small onions, green peas. All the ingredients are cooked separately, so that the final effect as well as the appearance of the dish is quite unstewlike. Serve like onion soup with brandied crouttes, and pass grated cheese.

51. At cocktail parties that are sure to come up, don't work yourself up into a tizzy. Don't send out a hurried call for a corps of stiff, startled-looking waitresses. Don't bombard your guests with tortured trayloads of what Gayelord Hauser calls fancy fat-balls. Do explore the possibilities of the perfect morsel served abundantly and with drama:

52. Can you think of anything better than fragrant, hot, snowy-white, fresh buttered popcorn, made in front of your guests—Popcorn aux Fines Herbes, sprinkled with fresh parsley, chives and tarragon, basil or chervil. Dust with Malden salt crystals from the grinder and freshly ground black pepper.

53. Have an oyster party. Send away for a bushel of salty Gardiner's Island oysters, or get a heap of tiny Olympia oysters from the West Coast—or delicate Louisiana oysters from Bayou LaTouche or Chincoteague from Maryland. Maybe you'd rather have cherrystones or Little Neck clams—many, many of them, on great trays with all the piquant accessories on hand that anyone could dream of wanting.

your old-fashioned cruet down off the shelf (there are new-fashioned ones, too), have red pepper sauce in them, Tabasco sauce, horseradish, Worcestershire, and its two cousins, walnut and mushroom sauce. Provide a bowl of lime as well as lemon sections cut into small, squeeze-size pieces.

55. Instead of ordinarily "red cocktail" sauce, provide the very continental Sauce Mignonette, which is nothing more than a tart French dressing made with lime or lemon juice and walnut oil or a very light French olive oil, and seasoned with salt, an extravagant sprinkle of coarsely ground or cracked black pepper, chopped chives, or capers.

56. Perhaps you'd rather have baked oysters presented on beds of heated rock salt, or Oysters Rockefeller, or Diamond Jim Brady's favored Oysters Casino. Then don't forget baskets of French bread—a necessity for sopping up the delicious juices that stay in the shell.

57. Lobsters are gala when the meat is cut into chunks put back into the shell to be speared with toothpicks and dipped into hot lemon butter kept bubbling in a nearby chafing dish.

58. Garlic-broiled shrimp should intrigue any guest, especially if they are done in full view on an infra-red broiler and passed forthwith.

59. Regal is caviar with blini. Any kind of caviar, red, black, natural, salted or pressed, may be served appropriately with silver-dollar size pancakes, as it was from Czarist tables.

60. The great Escoffier threw up his hands in epicurean horror at the idea of serving chopped onion with caviar, but most people love it, and all the other classic accompaniments like thick sour cream, lemon segments, chopped hard-cooked egg—yolks and whites separate.

61. Buy your blini quick frozen or make them from a mix. Add a cup of sour milk or yogurt, a tablespoon of melted butter or olive oil, and a well-beaten egg yolk to each cup of pancake mix to produce 36 blini.

62. In Charleston they make a turkey hash which deserves to be immortalized. To make it, gild your cooked turkey meat lightly in melted butter. Blaze with a little fine old brandy, then add dark turkey gravy, sliced mushrooms, a half teaspoon of mace, a beaten egg yolk, and thick cream. The hash is heated two minutes but never boiled after the cream is in. At the last minute stir in a tablespoon of lemon juice.

63. Turkey hash, fine on toast, is more inspired when served with hominy grits, brown rice, or within a ring of corn meal mush.

64. Any true Alabamian will tell you that there's only one real Christmas breakfast—waffles and turkey hash.

65. Quick-frozen waffles are more tender if they are brushed the second they come out of the oven with melted butter.

66. For breakfast or supper. Brazilian kippers in rum! Use quick-frozen or canned kippered herring—not the tomato-sauce variety. Lay kippers side by side in a shallow pan with a little butter. Sprinkle with freshly ground black pepper. Half-cover the fish with white rum. Light and keep spooning the burning rum around the herring until the flames die down.

67. Ham is the first thought for too many buffets, but set your ham on a silver platter, pour on a cup of warmed rum, brandy, or apple jack. Set ablaze, then slice. In addition to drama, the liquor adds a delicious flavor.

68. Be brave! Break away from tradition. Christmas can be Christmas without Mrs. Cratchit's plum pudding. Many people prefer a lighter dessert after a heavy meal.

69. Nostalgic and traditional during the holidays is Madeira wine jelly. There is a packaged Madeira jelly, or you can use orange-flavored gelatin dessert, substituting Madeira wine for part of the liquid. How much Madeira depends on you—one-half, three-fourths, or a full cup.

70. A Chocolate Yule Log has the look of a fancy French concoction, but is nothing more esoteric than a couple of chocolate ice cream rolls from the corner store, set end to end on a long dish. Garnish with sweetened whipped cream to look like snow on the log and decorate with sprigs of holly.

71. You may flare your Chocolate Yule Log if you like. Pour a half cup of warmed rum or brandy in the dish, light, and take the "log" blazing to the table.

72. A chocolate sauce of distinction, simple as can be—add a tablespoon of sherry to two cups of heated canned chocolate syrup. Sometimes a spoonful of undiluted quick-frozen orange juice goes in, too, and a small handful of white raisins.

73. When sauce is hot and dessert is cold emphasize that difference. Serve the dessert on a frosty platter, the sauce in a miniature chafing dish.

74. Order a mince and a pumpkin pie from the local baker who does them best. You know, of course, that the mince pie will keep beautifully and indefinitely in the freezer, but the pumpkin, being the custard type, is not adapted to freezing.

75. Top the baker's pumpkin pie with sour cream which has been allowed to stand a while with a little chopped preserved ginger. Until you've tried this you've no idea how delicious and different a pumpkin pie can taste.

76. Gourmets agree that a fine mince pie must never be served smoking hot, or even very cold, but only warm.

77. When re-heating a pie with a solid top, the crust will look prettier, taste richer if brushed lightly with melted butter. Apple and mince pies take most kindly to a sprinkling of grated Cheddar cheese.

78. Even if you have never dreamed of making your own fruit cake, try it this year, because there is a new fruit cake mix on the market made by Dromedary, which does practically everything for you, except light the oven. The package includes not only the readied fruits and the cake mix, but even the pan for baking and storing, and the paper pan-lining cut to fit. The package directions tell you to stir up the mix with water, fruit juice, coffee or milk, but there's no comparing the results if you let yourself go and use Jamaica rum, peach brandy, sherry, Madeira, or good Cognac!

79. A fruit cake baked in a ring is easy to come by in most any shop. You might serve such a cake in lieu of plum pudding. You can warm it in a steamer or a large double boiler and serve it with any of the usual or less usual pudding sauces.

80. Can you make Zabaglione? No pudding sauce is more glorious.

With the electric blender by the way, it's no trick at all. Whip the egg yolks, sugar, wine or rum until very light and frothy. Heat and beat a minute or two until the sauce thickens.

81. Make a blazing Christmas-wreath dessert from a ring-molded fruit cake or steamed pudding. The wreath is huckleberry studded with raw cranberries or candied cherries. Set inside the ring a Pyrex cup filled with warm rum or brandy. Light the liquor, slice the cake and serve a bit of flame to everyone for luck.

82. Instead of the inevitable turkey soup, use the carcass of the holiday bird to make a cassolet. Break up the bones, cover them with canned tomato sauced beans, flavor well with garlic, onion, thyme. Sprinkle with bread crumbs. All kinds of meat bits can go in together—a forgotten lamb chop, a few slices of salami.

83. Solve the Christmas Eve supper problem by reverting to the century-old tradition of the great families in Sweden. Serve a smörgasbord supper in the kitchen. Few or many can eat. Supper is hot all evening. For the dishes are left on the stove, the pans decorated for gaiety with red ribbons.

84. Any one of a dozen mail-order places will send you a hamper filled with all the needfuls for a Christmas smörgasbord. Fine insurance against the arrival of unplanned for guests.

85. If you haven't time to make your own Swedish meat balls, take a can of meat balls in tomato sauce and add one-fourth teaspoon allspice, one-half teaspoon Kitchen Bouquet. Heat and stir in a little sour cream. Serve with boiled potatoes, green beans, lingonberries. Quite authentic!

86. Another Scandinavian thought: Rice porridge for Christmas Eve dessert. Use a rice pudding mix—you know there is one—make it loose, add a bit of lemon rind and hide a single almond. Whoever gets the almond will wed this year.

87. Christmas or New Year's wouldn't seem legal in a French Canadian home if tourtières weren't on the menu. These are double crust pies, filled with hamburger

"Cat's ladder," kindergarten-easy, makes smart festoons. Use good color and wide ribbon or paper. Make a right-angle fold in the center of a long length of flat ribbon. See sketch. Fold End B under End A. Then fold End A under End B. Repeat, ad infinitum. Pile of square folds becomes a textured garland. Ribbon, Tie-Tie "Satintone."

"Spun sugar" festoon of satiny ribbon. Just stack long ribbon in even lengths, as if measuring it, but don't crease it. Keep loops uniform. Then tape together where they touch each other. Short ribbons, doubled without creasing and secured with tape, can be bunched into gift and tree trims. Scotch Brand Cellophane Tape, "Sasheen" ribbon.

Sunburst of glitter—made of three 29"-long strips of dime-store metallic "cut acetate," each strip accordion-pleated  $\frac{3}{4}$ " deep, then laid one on the other and fanned out into a circle. Just follow sketch. Bottom layer is cut 5" wide, pleated, given a fancy edge. Middle layer is 3" wide, pleated, given an acute-angle edge. Top layer is a straight  $1\frac{1}{2}$ "-wide pleated strip. Punch corresponding holes along straight edge of each strip. Draw metallic crochet cord through holes. Tie tightly. Tape sides of strips together. There's your sunburst.

Chain links, which children make like a flash, can have great style if they're large-scale. Broad ribbon, metallic paper, sequin-punch ribbon, leftover bits of wrapping ribbon are possibilities. But all links must be uniform in size. Secure each link with a staple or tape. "Satintone" rayon ribbon adheres if moistened, without any fastening.

Spring bow tree ornaments are simple coils of  $\frac{1}{2}$ "-wide ribbon. Hold end of ribbon firmly between thumb and forefinger. Wind a tiny circle around your thumb. Continue winding, making each loop a little larger until you get size you want. Fasten firmly with a tie. By gently pressing spring bow, you can form ovals or heart shapes.

Ribbon wreath. This is a series of graduated "figure eights" made of ribbon. Lay ribbon end flat against third and fourth fingers. Keep same side of ribbon up and make a figure eight. Loops should be even. Now make three or four more figure eights on top of first pair of loops, each time decreasing the size of loops. Be sure to keep firm hold at center, where loops cross. A paper clip at center will hold loops while you make a tie. Loops fall in wreath shape when ornament is hung. Extended, wreath is a flat package bow. Tie-Tie "Satintone" ribbon.

Encourage the youngsters to make their own Christmas

PHOTOGRAPHS BY WILLIAM HOWLAND

Cellophane sippers, in varying lengths pasted on with bright colored tape make Christmas tree card. Letters, cut from last year's cards, are taped on. Colored elastic bands, cotton and Scotch Brand cellophane tape are the ingredients for Junior's Santa card.

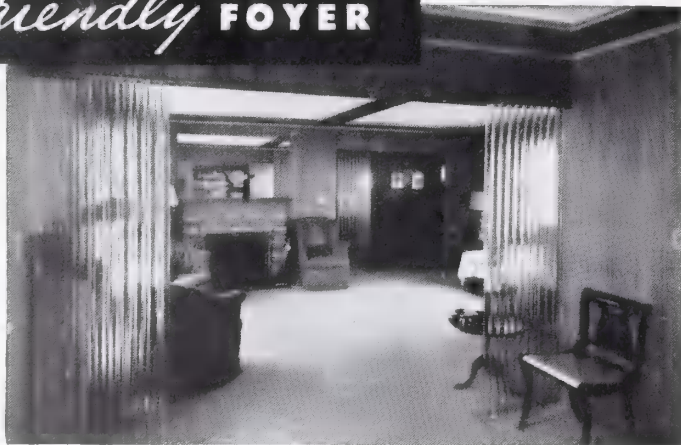

Stars—of paper cut-outs or of silver and gold, ready-cut and ready-pasted—can be stapled together to make three-dimensional tree ornaments. Staple them flat, then spread them out. Flitter would add sparkle to your tree.

Tree shapes cut out of colored paper are taped together with clear Scotch Brand cellophane tape. The little candles are "straw" sippers taped on with red tape. Junior can do it.

GLASS CREATES A friendly FOYER

The softly lustrous surface of Structural Corrugated glass glows a warm welcome into the entry hall from this handsomely appointed living room. The interplay of light and shadow against the rhythmic pattern of the glass adds drama to the decor... creates a feeling of spaciousness and hospitality.

And this modern material is so practical. It floods interiors with soft, borrowed light that flatters furnishings, but protects privacy. Structural Corrugated glass creates partitions that are always new, easy to keep sparkling clean, never require painting.

We put the "Broad" in Broadcloth

SPRINGMAID broadcloth is one of the most versatile of all fabrics. It is at home riding high in a Rolls Royce, or lying low in a hay wagon.

You'll find it as drapes in the little frame house in the country . . . and draping the more prominent frames in the city. It accompanies the modest maid to the square dance . . . the dazzling damsel to dances on the Square.

It is equally at ease as a suit at the bathing beach, a stole at the banquet table, or a camisole in a beauty's boudoir.

Age cannot wither its washability, nor "customs" stale its infinite variety. You'll find it hanging around hot spots in Hollywood—over hickory limbs in the hinterlands.

Broadcloth decorates the debutante, protects the working girl. It helps a young lass to put up a good front, safeguard her assets and pull through in a pinch.

No matter how you cut it, broadcloth is a girl's best friend.

One Great Big Happy Family

While there's love there's hope. Think of this next time you listen incredulously as your children coolly tell you how they cover their faces and get under their desks when the teacher gives the signal for an air-raid drill.

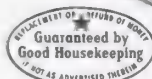

No, it is not yet hopeless. In the United Nations men of good will still have one last good hope that somehow, someday, the vast human family will live in peace.

But we must all help. There is no one of the UN's many world-wide agencies where help will do more good than the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund. One dollar this Christmas brings you 10 "Around the World with UNICEF" greeting cards—2 each of Leonard Weisgard's 5 charming pictures of the world's children. Or, for the same sum, 10 handsome cards of the UN building, done by Raoul Dufy. See your local UN information center.

TAKE IT EASY, Lady!

The best Christmas gifts are those which contribute to holiday food, fun, and festivity, yet do their work year round

By Charlotte Conway

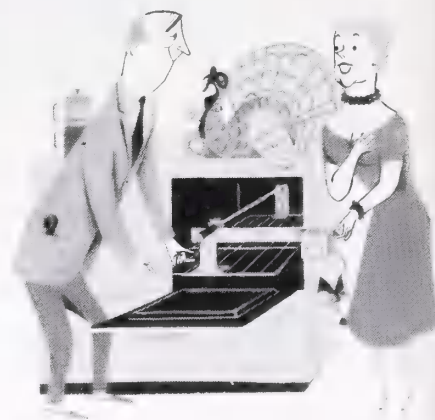

DRAWINGS BY KELLY OESCHLI

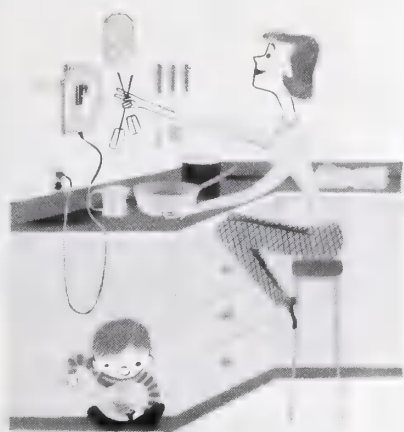

Everyone likes brass and copper, and who wouldn't applaud a copper electric roaster? Now it's good-looking enough to come to table, whether buffet or regular service. It adds a fine decorative touch to the kitchen, too. Nesco makes an oval copper roaster, like that shown, in 6-qt. capacity. They also have a smaller 2 $\frac{3}{4}$ -qt. model which is round. Set automatic thermostat at front for any temperature from 150° to 500°. Or turn it "off" and leave roaster connected while not cooking. Pilot light glows when heat is on.

Any "they-have-everything" names on the gift list? Young or old, they'll really thank you for a new gadget which makes any electric range into a barbecue unit. Called the Ranger, it is made by the Rotiss-O-Mat Corp. Just attach it to the front of your oven, plug it in, and you can barbecue as much meat or fowl as your oven will hold. Detaches easily for storage. Spit is stainless steel, runs on AC motor. Cooking time is shortened, food has that popular barbecued flavor. A good way to feed guests at holiday festivities.

If you're one of those people who insists on storing kitchen tools at point of use, a new portable mixer is for you. A slot in the bottom lets you hang it on the wall, anywhere in the kitchen. Or you can store it in cabinet or drawer. The mixer weighs only 3 lbs., can be used with one or two beaters, depending on type of batter and size of bowl. Adjustable to high or low speed, it has a rubber base guard so it rests on edge of bowl without damage to bowl or itself. Or it can rest on its heel. General Electric.

The teen-age crowd will whoop a holiday welcome if the Hamilton Beach home drink mixer comes into the house, gift wrapped. It's just like having a soda fountain at home. Wonderful for ice cream drinks (made from that goodly supply of ice cream in the freezer). Or any kind of milk drink. Splendid for aerating frozen fruit juices, too. Grown-ups will find it handy for whiskey sours, Tom Collinses, and such. Twenty-ounce plastic cup mixes 16 ounces of drink without any splashing. Operates on either AC or DC.

Someone on your gift list who's never warm enough? Give him, her, or them an electric sheet in rosebud pattern. Westinghouse has brought it out in mercerized broadcloth with pink and green rosebuds on a pink background. Sized for double beds, and just as good for twin size, with 7" non-heated area for tuck-in at the foot. Comes with single or dual controls. Bedside control box looks like a powder box, can stand on night table or be hung on hanger on bed itself. You set control for amount of warmth desired.

IT'S WORTH MENTIONING

By Julie Polshek

Creating a Moon Patrol scenic panel is a decorating project sure to evoke volunteered aid. You paint the wall dark sky color, then daub on myriad stars. Walford's Moon Patrol kit supplies the hand-screened wallpaper portion: 2 panels (49' x 2') depicting Earthmen climbing moon craters, cut-out sheet of Earth, Saturn, 6 rocket ships (extra sheet $1.95), and adaptation ideas. Kit costs $19.50. Edith Chapman, Nyack, N. Y.

The circular guides furnished by Rubbermaid's Pastry Tray make it easy to accurately cut pie crusts to any wanted diameter. The cloth-like finish of the rubber tray's rolling surface prevents dough from sticking and helps no end to achieve the light, easy rolling so important to a flaky crust. Channeled edge catches straying flour. Tray's reverse side serves as a chopping or slicing board. 16" x 20", $2.98, Macy's, New York.

Elegant woven plastic is handsomely used in these silklike D'Orette Hostess Mats. They're rugged, need no care, so heat-resistant that you can press them. Burgundy, dark gray, forest green, ice-blue; white scrolls. Pair (44" x 11") plus 4 hand-sewn Irish linen napkins piped in mat color, $22.50. Black wrought-iron candletree has 10 wide flowerlike holders, $6, with candles. From Bertram Shrier, Ltd., 1145 Connecticut Ave., Washington, D. C.

Frosty drinks retain their ice and chill for about two hours in these double-walled, plastic tumblers. They're sweat-proof, so coasters aren't needed. Gits-Ware Thermo-Glass also keeps hot beverage piping and you've a cool hold while sipping. Assorted colors in this Town & Country Set (8) can be paired off mixed or matched. Usable, too, as 16 conventional tumblers. $5.95, Hammacher Schlemmer, New York, N. Y.

The dual-purpose funnel that serves the jars of E-Z-Find Handirack makes it a cinch to sort and re-store their contents. You use the bowl-like device as a selection tray; then, by simply sliding the panel that opens and closes its chute, left-overs are returned to their jar. Strong steel rack (gray finish) furnishes 15 large jars, removed by simply sliding them out. $11.85. Foolcraft Products, 5090 Tennyson, Denver, Colo.

Two whimsical, English TV characters, Muffin-the-Mule and Louise-the-Lamb, are depicted at play in the woods in this beguiling Belgian-made rug. The scene is duplicated on lamp's sturdy white plastic shade; wood base is finished to match ground color of rug. The chenille-type cotton rug (23" x 40") has non-skid back. Pink, blue, pastel-green, beige ground. $4.95. Lamp, $8.50. From Pee Van Gee Imports, Box 615, Manhasset, N. Y.

Peg-Board's 400 hanging stations and hooks, which you can shift to suit changing needs, are the epitome of convenience. The board keeps miscellany, small or large tools and utensils orderly and easily accessible. A boon for workshop and garage and an easy way to create hanging space on closet doors. White-finished hardboard (20" x 23"). $3.98 with 24 hooks, 4 spring-clips for papers. From Bloomingdale's, New York.

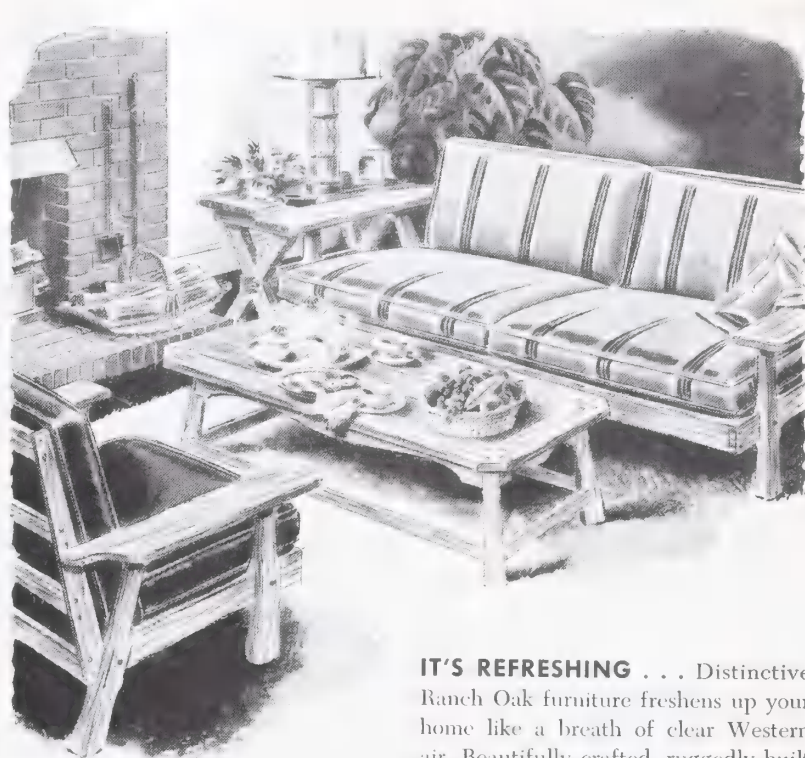

A rank amateur can expertly complete this graceful Calfab bench, and in short order. Its frame (17" high; seat 18" x 15") is cut and drilled so precisely that perfect assembly and cording are assured. The fine, grained hardwood is sanded satin-smooth for finishing. Choice of decorative cord or 2-inch webbing, vat-dyed and fine quality. Red, green, black. Kit, $10. Calfab Furniture, 1731 Superior, Costa Mesa, California.

You make these His, Her, and Smaltry stockings from the contents of Merri-Bell Xmas-Stocking Kits. The sewing involved is so simple a 10-year-old can handle it. Each kit furnishes pertinent appliqué motifs of multicolor felts, 2 red felt stocking pieces (13" long), white cuff, alphabet pattern, and red felt for lettering, bell, hanger, spangles, appliqué thread, green yarn. $1 each. riding over the open plain. Cost: $10. The driver knows how to find lions, etc. They come out of cover late in the afternoon. However, they're temperamental; they may not show. Never your mind. You will be thrilled to see zebra, giraffe, antelope, and the grotesque gnu.

The other National Parks are wilder and harder to reach. They are:

"Tsavo"—jammed with elephants, rhinos, and buffalo. It has a pond of crystal-clear water, where you watch the hippos as they walk and play and teach their babies—all under water!

"Amboseli"—a dry lake bed at the foot of Mt. Kilimanjaro. You will see an elephant or rhino in the foreground, the Snows of Kilimanjaro floating improbably high in the sky behind.

"Marsabit"—a green, tree-covered hill-oasis in an empty desert. Sounds wild? It is. Elephants here; some rare varieties of antelope, giraffe, and zebra. Plus camel-herding, long-robed, fierce-looking Mohammedan Somali tribesmen.

All parks have "rest houses" where you can stay. But you need your own car, food, bedding, and "boys." The car you can rent. But as a tourist, you can hardly organize the rest. The way it is now, the parks are the private domain of the "safari" firms. You hire them, or you just about don't go. But if you do that, you might as well go on a real safari.

This is way number two to see the animals. What is a safari? It's simply a camping trip done up brown, with servants (a swarm of them); fancy camp equipment (double-walled tents for Climate Control, special dining tent, cots with mattresses, canvas rugs, china plates, good food, hot baths, guaranteed clean drinking water, a kerosene-burning refrigerator, a radio). They send a two-ton truck ahead to set up camp. Your bed is turned down at night, the mosquito net tucked in tight. Laundry is washed every day. Morning tea is brought to your bed. What I mean is—you don't suffer.

How do you arrange it? You go to a firm of "White Hunters and Safari Outfitters," and write a check. That's all. They furnish the camp equipment, servants, food—in short, everything except cigarettes and liquor. They also furnish food—in short, everything except the "Safari Car": a specially-built body with open side to let you see but keep the sun off you, mounted on a truck chassis to take the rough going. Much of your driving is across the open prairie—no road. And, of course, they furnish the White Hunter himself.

A White Hunter is a man who knows the animals. He knows the country. He is an expert tracker, a crack shot. But he is not just a hunting guide; he is a perfect gentleman and gracious host who handles you with the utmost care and keeps you happy, plus taking care of you as only your own Maw and Paw would.

What do you do on safari? There are two kinds—shooting safaris and photographic-sightseeing safaris. About the shooting kind, better get your information direct. My kind is the photographing kind. The shooting kind takes a real human, according to men who've done it. My kind is no effort at all, at no danger either—just fun.

You ride around through the magic land of animals where people live. You look for the animals you fancy, and you find them. I've watched a lion family for 30 feet away for hours at a time: papa feeding, mama teaching the babies how to stalk; mama trying to feed, too, papa roaring at her. And I wasn't being brave. (Secretly the lion can't smell you who you're in a car, and what he can smell, he won't eat.)

Things to take on safari: wasable, tough clothes; warm clothes; comfortable, tough walking shoes; a large-brimmed hat. (A real Western American hat is a prize possession among the locals.) And a telephoto lense for your camera, be it movie or still. You can have khaki clothes made in Nairobi, quickly and cheap. Ask your White Hunter where. Or bring blue jeans, hardy cotton blouses and shirts, bring warm shirts, jackets, sweaters, and cardigans for evening. Plus a wool coat, warm pajamas and nightgowns.

The telephoto lense for your camera is more important than sounds. An ordinary camera makes the lion look 100 feet away when he was only 20 feet. Just when you want to brag to your friends, your pictures make you a liar. P.S. Bring your own color film. You can't buy it locally. So come equipped Safaris are expensive—anywhere from $1,000 to $1,300 for two people for two weeks. (A month will cost you between $2,000 and $2,500 for two people.) These rates are for photographic safaris. Rates for three or four people are not substantially lower because it means more tents and servants. It's worth the money, anyway. Main point is to beware of cheap safaris. Quality is everything. Your fun, and in fact your safety, depend 99 per cent on the skill of your White Hunter—and a good one doesn't have to cut prices. Hundreds of people call themselves "White Hunters," but there are only about 25 members of the East African Professional Hunters Association. Nairobi, Kenya, British East Africa.

THE third way to see the animals is to spend a night at "Treetops." This is one of the Big Things in Africa, and one that is set up right for the air age. "Treetops" is a four-room house with veranda, built to the top of a giant fig tree that stands in the mountain forests about 90 miles from Nairobi. You spend the afternoon and night there; have tea, drinks, dinner, and breakfast; comfortable beds and plenty of service. Below the tree is a combination pond, mud-bath and salt lick. It's a moonlight night, silent except for the bird call of a tropical bird. From the shadows, ghostly figures move without sound: elephants. They stop just below you. They don't know you're there, so they act natural, dignified, thoughtful, slow-moving. They suck the salty earth up with their trunks—swisssh—then toss it in their mouths. They mill around, searching for choice bits. That's what I said: you, watching the elephants play. A mother rhino appears on the scene, followed by baby rhino. She fusses and fumes and snorts and huffs and puffs. He is obviously a spoiled cat. Now he's hungry and wants a nurse. He must turn his head sideways, or he'll prick mama with that already-sharp baby-rhino horn on his snoot. Animals come and go all night; long after you have gone to bed. Cost: $10.

For reservations, write The Outspan Hotel at Nyeri. ("Treetops" is an annex of the Outspan.) And book it early. Only nine people go at a time, and it's very popular. One night of the full moon is best; next best, any of the four nights before full moon. However, they have an "artificial moon" if you miss the real one—so you see the whole performance anyway. In your excitement over the animals, don't forget the people. Few regions on earth have a richer mixture—Indians, who control most of the trade; rich green planters; Arabs who walk about with silver daggers on their stomachs; German coffee planters left over from before World War I; South African Boer farmers, leading the hard, sparse Boer life in the hills; plus a score of African tribes.

I know you are not interested in African natives. But you will be! Wait till you see a spear-carrying man, half naked, his skin smeared with red earth, walk right across the traffic in Nairobi's main street. You'll say: "Who's that guy?" There are two tribes you'll want to meet—"Kikuyus" and "Masai."

The Kikuyus are farmers. They are prosperous, progressive, go to school. Many speak English. They are famous for their ears—they split the earlobe and stretch it until it is a loop that sometimes hangs down to their shoulders. Repulsive? Not at all! After you have been around these parts for a while, you begin to think white people look ugly and naked around the ears. However, these loops do get in the way. The "King's African Rifles," native troops, have a standing order: "Ears will be worn folded on parade."

To meet the Kikuyus in their own back yards, take a walk along the native trails behind the Outspan Hotel. Don't be timid. They are timid; you must make the first overtures. Admire the children, show them your camera—and smile. If you seem like a nice person, they will invite you to look at their houses. And wait till you see how clean they keep them!

THE Masai are different. They are cattle people and still live the life of 5,000 years ago. Before the white man came, they ruled East Africa, and in fact kept the white man out quite a while. Now they live in a sad but proud poverty. They refuse help—no schools, medicine, veterinaries for them.

You pass through their country when you go on safari. You see them walking along the roads—red-painted and magnificent. Stop and get them to show you how they throw their war clubs. (They'll die laughing if you try it yourself.) And be sure to visit one of their villages. You'll be appalled by the dirt and flies. But you see Africa as it was—untouched by Western ways. (This is hard to find.) They will not hurt you. They are more timid than the Kikuyus. So keep smiling and pat those darling ba-hot to very cold are bad for cooking utensils, why shouldn't all the life go out of meat when you pop it from a 40° F. refrigerator into a pre-heated oven? Anyway, try it and decide for yourself.

But the experts and I (I am not an expert) are in agreement about not sacrificing the quality of the meat because of the everlasting emphasis on speed-up. We are all "thumbs down" on searing, as it increases the shrinkage and the drying. Those who like the browned taste of searing can accomplish it at the end of the cooking period without affecting the shrinkage too much. Just turn up the oven to 450° F. for the last half hour. Browning at the end of the cooking causes less shrinkage than at the beginning (which supports my theory of the cold start, for it avoids sudden changes in temperatures).

With these few principles out of the way, here is the exact story of how I do our Thanksgiving turkey and our Christmas goose.

In the roasting of fowl, my pet theory is that the birds should always be roasted breast side down. The sweetness of the bones, the seasonings from the stuffing all seep out into the breast making it juicy and flavorful. When I first became aware of how juicy the back of a roast chicken was when it was cooked breast side up, started a train of thought—why the back so juicy and the breast so dry? Of course it was because all the juice ran down. Why not try roasting the bird breast side down? It works like a charm.

I treat all fowl a little differently. For instance, chicken and turkey should be well rubbed with butter. The turkey gets a wrapper or cloak of a buttered cloth to keep the bird basted during its roasting period. I always cover a goose with a lid so that it steams tender. Any wild fowl whose tenderness you are not sure of can be steamed to a juicy tenderness.

I always stuff the holiday turkey or goose the day before. It takes time to chop all the ingredients and I like to get as much done in advance so that on The Festival Day I will have a minimum of work to do. I have discovered that the flavor of the dressing permeates the fowl, spreading its goodness throughout.

Have your butcher draw your turkey as soon as it comes in the market. Have him also cut the neck as close to the body as possible, and also draw out the tendons from the legs. Be sure to have the neck, heart, liver, and gizzard wrapped in a package, for

Comparative-temperature cooking tests

High heat—high shrinkage. This shrunken roast of bird was cooked at 450° F. with a 35% loss in fat, natural juice and nutrients (3 cups of drippings). Fat liquefies at high temperature, causing the meat to dry out and become tough. Notice how meat has pulled away from the bones. Now, opposite, how to get more from an identical piece of bird.

These are all good to use in making the gravy.

If the turkey has not been thoroughly cleaned, or smells a little strong, wash the inside with warm water in which a tablespoon of soda has been dissolved. Dry cavity, cut out oil sac at base of tail, and check turkey for pin feathers. They are fairly easily pulled out with just a small kitchen knife and a strong thumb.

You will need several small skewers to "pin" the cavities closed and you might need the "heel" of a loaf of bread to keep the stuffing in. You will need loads of butter. I use at least three-quarters of a pound of butter. So don't stint. This is one time of year when you must make your mind a blank on the food budget. Use one-quarter pound of melted butter in the dressing, nearly one half well rubbed into the turkey and one quarter melted for the cloth with which I cover the bird. One gal said to me, "Doesn't the turkey taste like an old burned rag?" Rest assured that the cloth does not impart an undesirable flavor in any way; it just acts as a marvelous baster.

On the day before, I prepare as much of the holiday dinner as I can: the cranberry sauce, the stuffing, the base for the gravy, wash the lettuce, make the dough for the pumpkin pies. I get out all the dishes and the serving platters.

On the big day, I give all the family cocktails of domestic pink champagne (I like Cresta Blanca very much.) We are soon on a rosy cloud and the festive day is really festive instead of drudgery.

Since the turkey is the main feature of your dinner, do not give your guests too much beforehand. For our Thanksgiving family dinner we always have the same menu: clear clam and chicken consommé with minced parsley served in large cups in front of the fire. Then turkey with cranberry sauce, cauliflower and broccoli cooked together with brown butter sauce (no rich hollandaise, please—it's too much trouble and adds too much richness to the dinner), a mixed green salad, and hot biscuits (the canned buttermilk biscuits). We have pumpkin pies for dessert. You can add potatoes to your menu if you wish. I think they fill up too much space in your tummy, for there are more important items of food to eat on the festive day.

Make the sauce for the gravy the day before by boiling the neck, gizzard, and heart. Chop all the ingredients for the stuffing of the turkey. When stuffing the turkey remember you want to drop in the dressing by spoonfuls. Don't pack it in, for stuffing swells and you want it to be light and fluffy. I have noticed that most dressings are made with lots of bread, but I have worked out a stuffing that is mostly vegetables, primarily because I thought it would be better for the children. Be sure to weigh prove that low temperature pays

Low heat—low shrinkage. This roast cooked at 325°F. (a slow oven) is plumper, more tender, and juicier. The shrinkage was only 18%. Note one cup of drippings. Because the fat layer doesn't liquefy appreciably, the juices are retained in the meat instead of spilling into the pan. Swift & Company made this comparative test.

the turkey before you stuff it and allow 25 minutes per pound for birds under 12 pounds and 20 minutes per pound for larger birds. If you are using a frozen turkey take it out of the freezer two days before using it and allow it to thaw. It may be partially frozen when you put in the dressing, but that will not harm the dressing.

Get bread crumbs from the bakery. If you can get sour dough French bread crumbs they are the best. I have to get mine from a city 100 miles away, and, as I use these crumbs for many things, I get a five-pound package, freeze it, and so always have the crumbs on hand.

Stuffing for Turkey

- 1 cup chopped onions, sugared
- 1 cup chopped parsley
- 1 cup chopped carrots
- 1 cup chopped celery
- 1 small apple chopped
- 1 large clove garlic, run through garlic press
- 1 cup coarsely chopped mixed nuts (no peanuts)
- 1 to 2 cups bread crumbs, depending on size of turkey
- 1 teaspoon Spice Islands Beau Monde Seasoning
- 1 teaspoon brown sugar
- 1 teaspoon M.S.G. (monosodium glutamate)
- 1 teaspoon salt
- ½ teaspoon Spice Islands Java Cracked Pepper
- ½ pound butter, melted

If you like a fish flavor, add one can (7 oz.) of Pioneer minced sea clams. Use the entire contents, but also use two cups of bread crumbs instead of the one cup, for there is an additional amount of liquid from the clams.

I chop the onions first, for they should stand for a while with the brown sugar. Keep onions separate from the rest of the ingredients. I use Pyrex pitchers to hold chopped ingredients for ease of measurement. As you put chopped onions into the measuring cup, sprinkle sugar on each layer. This takes out all the "sting" of the onion, making it milder and, of course, sweeter. Melt butter. Chop parsley, carrots, celery, and apple, and add garlic. I put this in a four-cup Pyrex pitcher. Keep nuts and crumbs separate. Add dry seasonings to bread crumbs. Put crumbs and seasonings into large mixing bowl and, if you can stand it, call in the children and let them mix everything.

I use a wooden spoon to stir the dressing. Everything must be mixed well but not heavily, as if you were patting it. I find that children love to press things down rather than toss lightly. After you carefully show them, though, they do a good job. They can add the chopped carrots, parsley, and celery, but you add the onions, because by this time a lot of juice from the onions has formed and you must fork them out to avoid getting in too much juice, as that is the distressing part of onions. After all ingredients are well stirred, add ¼ lb. melted butter slowly while stirring or tossing lightly, so that all is well mixed. After much tasting and a little dash of sugar, salt, or Beau Monde are added, you are ready to stuff the turkey.

Get out the roasting pan with a rack, unless you have one of those standing V-shaped racks that holds the bird. Melt another ¼ pound of butter and have a clean cloth ready. I use part of an old sheet, torn just big enough to cover the bird well. The cloth has to be thrown away, so do not use a good tea cloth.

I stuff the breast end of the bird first, spooning it in. Do not press it in, for that will make it soggy. You can lightly shake the bird to make the dressing settle a bit, and fill the cavity only three-quarters full. Allow room for expansion. Close up opening with a skewer. Fold wings over back. Stuff the cavity with the remainder of the dressing and if you can't fold the skin over the opening and close it, use the heel of a loaf of bread and skewer the opening closed as well as possible.

Now comes the fun of rubbing the butter into the turkey. Rub in as much butter as the turkey will take, then tie legs together with a stout string. Place breast side down in pan, dip cloth into melted butter and saturate it, cover the turkey, tucking cloth around the legs, and put the whole thing into the ice box until ready to pop into that cold oven. Set thermostat to 300°F. During the last hour of cooking, baste turkey every 15 minutes with juice from bottom of pan. Fifteen minutes before turkey is ready to be carved lift bird out, check for brownness, and pour off most of the juice into Pyrex pitcher. After letting juice stand for a while that the fat rises, pour off all the fat. Whizz in a blender the gizzards from neck, gizzard, etc., with carrots and onions and celery mounts given in following recipe), adding six soda crackers for every cup of liquid. Put this in a sauce pan, add drippings from the roaster (no fat, please) and heat, stirring until thickened. Add chopped giblets. I serve the gravy in a hot covered small casserole so it will be good and hot and stay hot.

Broth for base of gravy

gizzard heart
1 medium onion, chopped
2 carrots, chopped
2 stalks celery, chopped
2 sprigs of parsley, chopped
1 teaspoon M.S.G.
1/2 teaspoon freshly ground pepper

Simmer the above for 2 1/2 hours the day you are stuffing the turkey. Put in refrigerator overnight. Remove excess fat. Use broth as gravy base. Chop gizzard and heart if you like giblet gravy. The raw liver can be cut in small pieces and dropped in the gravy and cooked while sauce is thickening.

Christmas Goose

Allow one pound or more per serving for a goose. This bird is really a luxury item and we only have it as the traditional bird at Christmas time. A big, full, 10-pound goose will serve six to eight. If the geese are small, eight pounds under, I get two, for the breast and the two legs are really the only parts you can serve attractively. You have to pick up the breast and eat it in your fingers. This meat is all dark and, if it is cooked properly, it is delicious and a real treat.

It is not wise to buy a goose weighing less than eight pounds for it is all bone and you don't get your money's worth. As a goose is very fat, you do not have to baste it with butter. But it's a tougher bird than a turkey and a moist roast is a better way of cooking. I put mine (breast down) in a roaster that can be covered. Do not prick skin to let off fat. I tried this idea once and we had the driest goose in the world. (Thank goodness I was cooking two geese and the other was delicious, not having been pricked.)

If you can order geese, have the butcher draw them as soon as they are killed, or as soon as they come to the shop. Clean well with a damp cloth and stuff the day before cooking. Be sure to weigh birds before they are stuffed and allow 30 minutes to the pound for birds under ten pounds, 25 minutes for larger birds. For two geese I use the same amount of dressing and the same recipe that I use for a turkey. The only difference is the apple can be bigger, only one cup of crumbs, and a scant quarter of a pound of butter. Nor do I use the clams.

Make a bouillon of the heart, neck, and gizzard, as with the turkey.

Put a cup of water in the roaster, put geese in breast side down on the rack, cover with the top of the roaster and put in a 300°F. oven. Goose is better overcooked than undercooked. So allow plenty of time, for it is delicious if it falls off the bones. Proceed to make gravy just as for turkey. But you must first skim off all the fat.

For our family's Christmas dinner we feature the goose, as the goose is much richer and more flavorful than a turkey. Around it I serve things to complement it, rather than vie with its flavor. For the first course I serve a bouillon with minced parsley and chives and Peas Bonne Femme for the main vegetable.

Peas à la Bonne Femme

- 2 packages frozen peas
- 1/4 pound fresh peas
- 1/4 head lettuce broken in small chunks, or 1 small head Boston lettuce
- 2 green onions, chopped
- 1 teaspoon sugar
- 1 teaspoon M.S.G.
- 2 tablespoons butter
- 2 tablespoons chopped parsley
- 2 tablespoons chopped chives
- 1/8 teaspoon Spice Islands Java Cracked Pepper
- 1 bay leaf (optional)
- 4 tablespoons butter, added last

Into a frying pan put the lettuce, chopped green onions, sugar, butter, M.S.G., pepper, and bay leaf. Also the pods from the fresh peas. Break the frozen peas in as small bits as possible. (This is easily achieved if you unwrap the peas 15 minutes before ready to cook.) Scatter in the few fresh pea pods, put on the lid, bring to quick boil, turn off the heat and allow to steam one minute. Add more butter, chopped chives, and parsley. Stir well. Dish up in a hot serving plate and serve at once. This succulent delicacy is usually the most overcooked vegetable in the world. Don't ruin yours by allowing it to sit for ages before serving. Serves 8.

Apple sauce and mixed green salad make up the rest of the main course. For dessert, orange sherbet with Cointreau and fruit cake and, for the die-hard traditionalists, a plum pudding with hard sauce.

HOW TO LEAVE HOME AND LIKE IT

the drama of race track, jai alai, and gaming table, and her habit, seemingly, of never going to bed, may appear to be a bit forced, almost too gay. But Christmas being an emotional holiday anyway, especially in Latin America, Havana celebrates it not only with characteristic flair, but with a real and heart-warming sincerity. The program is a full one: street dances both staged and spontaneous, games, concerts, theatrical presentations, and, on Christmas Eve, and early for Havana, the many old church bells tolling their invitation to midnight services. For once at least you'll feel that Havana is really doing what comes naturally. You'll find the results contagious, participation easy, and you will consequently have yourself a very Merry Christmas.

Penitente

Any time of year New Mexico's particular blend of Indian and Spanish background is one of the Southwest's most exciting combinations. But, come December, this part of the world is especially worth a visit. Head for Las Cruces, on U.S. 85, which threads the Rio Grande Valley north to south, and was once the state's main thoroughfare. It takes you today along the path of New Mexico's early history. But down around Las Cruces, the Valley's chief charm lies in the fact that so much of it, having seen epic events come and go, has since been content to drowse on, unchanged, even little known.

Make Las Cruces your headquarters. But even in this progressive town, your hotel may well be the Amador, where massive, mid-eighteenth-century walnut furnishings and displays of old oddments document the romantic past. One of your side trips should be to Old Mesilla, once the capital of all Arizona territory. Its adobe-surrounded plaza, usually so quiet, wakes up December 16 through 24 when that typically Mexican Christmas ritual known as Las Posadas fills it nightly with life and color.

You will also want to reserve December 10, 11, and 12 for the near-by Tortugas Indian Village. On these dates New Mexico's least-known Indian, the Tegua, honors the Virgin of Guadalupe with one of the state's rarest sights, a Pilgrimage of the Penitentes. Ceremonies open with the familiar costumed procession, bearing the image of the Virgin from her private chapel to the stone church.

It ends with a fiesta in which Pueblo ceremonies are mingled with Aztec music, while luminaries twinkle on the flat roofs. In between is the Pilgrimage proper. Through it the Tegua emulates the sufferings of one Juan Diego of Mexico, to whom the Virgin appeared, by taking up a heavy burden and with it making his way up the punishing slopes of Tortuga Mountain. It's done by the light of hundreds of bonfires, which give the bent figures grotesque shadow companions, momentarily lights up faces shining with sweat, drawn by effort, distorted by religious fervor, then shrouds the whole in a smoky pall of unreality. It reaches a climax when vast valley fires suddenly tongue skyward, revealing the stark peak and on it the still struggling figures, diminished by distance, nearing their goals.

Ireland at home

Among other reasons, both practical and esthetic, for visiting Europe early next year is Ireland's first An Tostal, from Easter Sunday through April 26, just when Ireland is at her springtime love liest and while many thrift season rates are still in effect.

In ancient Gaelic, An Tostal is a pageant, muster, array, or display. In Ireland this spring it will be all of them put together. For though this great celebration will be based on Dublin as the national capital, and is primarily a great big welcome home for all with special claims on the Ould Sod, the vast program of folk dancing, art sports, and other events will make this an unusually good time for anyone to visit Ireland. Your travel agent will be able to give you the program, which will help you time your trip, and suggest special tours and the like, which will give you further advantages in convenience and cost. Or check with the Irish Tourist Bureau, 33 East 50th Street, New York 22, N. Y.

TAKE IT EASY, LADY!

Remember the old days when the chafing dish was practically the badge of the college crowd? The '52 version is Knapp-Monarch's electric Chef-ster. It deep-fries, bakes, steams, warms, stews, or pops corn. The Thermo-pan, which heats by direct contact with electric element, has 3 $\frac{3}{4}$ -qt. capacity. You can set the control for any temperature between 100° and 400°. Glass top lets you watch what's cooking. Wonderful to use right at the table so everyone can get into the act. Ideal for buffet service, day or night.

If you want to interest the man of the house in cooking, give him a new electric Broil-Quik Chef, and let him barbecue, broil, grill, roast, or fry to his heart's content. Broil-Quik can sit on table or bookcase, for it's only 23" wide x 11" deep x 12" high, closed. Its infra-red heat is so quick that you can cook a second batch while first one is being served; convenient when you have a crowd. Top grill (hidden under closed top in sketch) can be used at same time as broiler or rotisserie unit. Motor operates on AC only.

Choose a color to go with your kitchen, if you use it there most of the time. Or with your china, if you cook at table. Red, blue, yellow, green, gray, and white baked enamel give you a wide range of color choice. Of course you can also have it in chrome if you prefer. Grand for fried oysters, doughnuts, lots of other foods for the holiday crowd.

Portugal today is engaged in a come-hither program designed to charm you into its pleasant atmosphere. A government licensing program, moreover, assures you of competent and trustworthy guide service. And, according to Trans-World Airlines which, with Pan American World Airways, brings Lisbon to less than a day's flight from New York, even luxury hotels are amazingly inexpensive: a two-room suite with private bath at Estoril's Palacio costs, for instance, only $13. A hard currency, furthermore, assures you of good value for whatever travel dollars you spend in addition. ## PANTRY SHELF NEWS

ing and baking. They present no oncoming impediment in frozen concoctions. The ingredient lists on the respective labels may make you wonder, as I did, why the flavor's essential oil is augmented with synthetic agents. These formulations, I learned, give a truer flavor and aroma in use than pure oils and infinitely greater stability.

A chocolate cake that has the taste and texture of rich, creamy fudge came my way recently. "Oh's" and "ah's" were heard from every corner when I passed around slices of the luscious creation. Butter, eggs, sugar, and fine chocolate are the principal ingredients of the batter, combined with just enough of a fine rice-flour. The recipe is of French origin, a family treasure of Colette Hebert, who makes the cake. Keep it refrigerated and remove it about 15 minutes before serving time; that interim softens to a velvety state. Topping the slices with coffee-flavored whipped cream may sound like gilding the lily, but you'll find it's a delectable combination. Vanilla ice cream or foamy pudding sauce are also delicious complements. And if you want to go whole-hog, the slices are elegant served flambé. You add the brandy, of course.

The 2-pound cake is so rich that it serves 12 persons. The cost is $4 postpaid; the source, Colette Hebert, 1037 Third Ave., N.Y.C.

Another festive dessert creation is the Maraschino Cherry Torte just introduced by the Charlotte Charles people. The pie-shaped torte is made of rich, caramel-flavored batter, thickly stocked with cherries, pineapple chunks and pecan halves. It comes to you in a foil-covered pie pan (tin-boxed) ready to pop into the oven if you want to serve it hot. Hot or chilled, whipped cream or ice cream enhance the torte's flavor in delicious fashion. Like the chocolate cake mentioned above, it can be given an extra flair flambé and topped with pudding sauce. It gives you eight generous servings; even more if you use a topping. You can order the torte from Hammacher Schlemmer if it is not available in local shops. Their address is 145 East 7th St., New York. Costs $2.75 ppd. within 150-mile area).

These references to pudding sauce make this the ideal moment to break the news about a pair of new dessert sauces that are out of this world. One of the Anee sauces is rum-flavored, the other whiskey-flavored, and both sauces boldly assert their respective flavors. The sauces are a thick, rich mixture of sweet cream, eggs, and sugar; the whiskey variety also contains caramelized sugar—an inspired touch. Either sauce on ice cream or plum pudding is something you won't want to pass up.

The pair (6-ounce bottles) costs $2.25. They're handsomely packed, should you have a gift in mind. A second boxing furnishes two bottles of each sauce, for $4.00. They can be ordered from Edith Chapman, Nyack, N. Y.

Another Anee creation that can be had from this source is a cock-tail pecan that's barbecued, of all things. The menfolk swooped them up by the handful; not that the gentler sex hung back. The pecan halves are barbecued over embers in exactly the same manner as meats. For about three days, a fiery curry-flavored sauce is ladled over the nut meat. The pecan and sauce flavors make quite a team. Just be sure you have plenty on hand to refill the bowls when they're served. 6-ounce jar, $1.50.

News of a de-boned, quickfrozen turkey which can be shipped from New York to any locality reached me in the midst of my writing. I summoned one posthaste, approved exuberantly, and made room for its inclusion here. Why didn't someone think of doing such a bird before? The turkey, as such, is superfine. I'm told they're virtually the only milk-fed ones used commercially. The White Holland Farms, which raise and process the de-boned turkey, use a de-feathering process that eliminates scalding; it leaves the skin creamy white. You roast the rolled meat right in the transparent, processed-paper sack that it's in when unpacked. The de-boned birds range from 7 to 15 pounds each and meat-wise are the equivalent of a conventional one twice the size. $2.10 a pound seems very nominal for de-boned turkey, and of this superior nature. Vendome Inc., 415 Madison Ave., New York, sells them. They assure me cross-country shipments can be made safely.

Maine lobster in its shell and looking as though it had been freshly boiled. Cap'n's Corner, whose chicken livers had their inning here recently, spent many months developing the canning technique; then put aside some of the cans since May so there would be no doubt of their long shelf life. They say "the lobsters go into the can alive and kicking and are live-boiled in lobster broth." It's broth with lots of umph that you can convert into bisque, if you wish. Did I mention that the lobster itself is firm-shelled and its meat juicy and flavorful? You can serve it hot or as is. Three cans for $6.25; add $2.50 if west of Mississippi. Cap'n's Corner, Camden, Maine.

Stuffed lobster is a "variation on the theme," so to speak, also created by Cap'n's Corner. The split halves are stuffed with a tasty mixture (some may like a spot more zest, ably supplied by a little Worcestershire sauce) made of lobster tamale, bread crumbs, and lobster juice. The stuffed halves are ready to go under the broiler for browning when removed from the delicious lobster bisque thrown in for good measure to give you a soup course. The price is $7 plus postage stipulation above for 3 cans.

Stone-ground, water-milled cornmeal of great excellence has been given a delightful gift slant by an Oklahoma miller. The meal, yellow or white, is packed in a picturesque jug made of the Frankoma glazed pottery for which Oklahoma is famous. A 2-pound package of the cornmeal, plus the jug and its 1½-pound content, are furnished as a unit for $5.50 postpaid. For your own use, a 5-pound package can be had for $1.50. From Golda's Old Stone Mill, Box 593, Muskogee, Oklahoma.

Saw Mill Farm, the people known for their unusual tomato-marmalade trio, have created a catsup trio that's even more unusual. One is made of purple grapes, delightfully accented with tarragon. It's made to order for ham.

Spiced apple catsup, the second variety, has somewhat more verve than the grape. It has much to offer as a relish complement to duck and game; try it with pork, too. Both these varieties can be heated for sauce use. Their scintillating blends seem to acquire an extra tang in hot form.

The third, cucumber catsup, is my special pet, I admit, doubtless because I soon discovered it has culinary uses along with its relish role. For instance, it's an interesting addition to the dressing of fish or tossed salad, and mingles tastily with cream cheese for canapé use. It's so thick with chopped cucumber that you almost have to spoon it out of the bottle. The chives in its make-up furnish a just-right complementary flavor. There's subtle herbing, too, in the vinegar dressing, and a mere breath of sugar to mellow the vinegar's bite. Catsup Holiday, as the trio is called, costs $2.50 postpaid, from Saw Mill Farm, New City, Rockland County, N. Y.

I learned about an unusual pack of albacore tuna last year. It proved very much to my liking and I wanted to pass the word along speedily. But I got a red light from Sportsmen's Cannery which packs it. Seems they hadn't enough to service new customers. Now, assured that all is well, I give you the details. Their canning method, a commercial adaptation of home-canned tuna, gives you the tuna au naturel; no auxiliary oil or seasoning is used. I'd never tasted albacore tuna in this natural state before. It's quite different from conventional canned tuna and I for one, vote for the natural tuna flavor. The meat is ever-so firm and hangs together in cooked tuna concoctions.

I've also become acquainted with this cannery's smoked salmon and a unique kippered variety. The kippered salmon is especially interesting. It is smoked with a subtle touch and the spicing used is equally subtle. These flavorings accent the salmon's natural savor rather than asserting their own presence. It makes for delicious eating.

The smoked salmon is sliced and in this pack a small amount of oil is deemed advisable to preserve the fresh-packed flavor and texture of the fish. The smoke's tang is more dominant in this variety than in the kippered type. The cannery plays up the Indian-style smoking they use. I must profess ignorance of the method, but it, doubtless, will be meaningful to men.

The tuna is priced at $1.75 for 3 cans; kippered salmon and the smoked at $2 and $2.25 in like quantity. An assorted trio costs $2.25, or an assortment of 8 cans for $5. Sportsmen's Cannery, Yacht Harbor, Berkeley, Calif.

FLY BACK TO THE GARDEN OF EDEN—EAST AFRICA

bies. But don't take pictures unless they act as if it's okay. They may suspect you are working some magic.

But the most interesting tribe is the British. Kenya's cool "White Highlands" is one of the few regions in Africa where the white man has settled—for good, he hopes. What's more, the beautiful hill country beneath the towering snows of Mt. Kenya is the last refuge of the British upper classes.

They lead a life that's about half way between English country life and life at a Hill Station in India. They hunt: "I just shot a buffalo before tea." They play polo, keep dogs, garden, write indignant letters to the papers. Servants are plentiful and cheap. To the old tweed coat of the country squire, they've added khaki shorts and a ten-gallon hat (preferably out of shape and slightly soiled). They are individualists—look at the sizes and shapes of their mustaches! They are nice people, easy to meet, fun to know. They are cultured, hospitable, interesting. Here is your last chance to see a kind of British life that elsewhere is gone.

You see some of these people in the lobby of the New Stanley Hotel in Nairobi. But don't spend your time in the city. Get out to the country where the life of the colony goes on. Spend a few days resting at the luxurious and delightful Mawingo Hotel at Nanyuki on the slopes of Mt. Kenya. I like especially the British settlers around Nanyuki. They are easy to meet, too—down in the village over morning tea; in the bar at the Mawingo. Or pick the Outspan. Tie it in with a "Treetops" visit.

When you do go to the White Highlands, don't take the bus—fly. (The bus is all right; it's the road that's terrible.) Charter a small airplane from Campling Bros. and Vanderwal at Nairobi West Airport. It costs around $30, but it's worth it, because you fly low over the Kikuyu Reserve. Watch the pattern of the earth. The contours of the fields, the colors of the crops. See the clusters of little round thatched huts: one for Papa, one for each Mama (they're polygamists). See the children run out and wave to you. You'll feel that you have friends down there. You'll feel closer to the people of Africa than at any other time on your whole trip.

Before you start home, take East African Airways down to Zanzibar—only 3¾ hours away. What is Zanzibar? It's a piece of the East lying off the coast of Africa. Half-Arab, half-Indian, 100 per cent delightful. It would be a crime to miss this. No use telling you about it. See to Believe. And Smell! Zanzibar is where most cloves come from. The whole island smells of cloves during February when they harvest. Heavenly! Hint: Take a rickshaw from the hotel through the winding, narrow streets of the old Arab city. Then start walking back. Keep your eyes open for the street where gold jewelry is made. This is the McCoy, and no kidding. Also for junk shops: antique jewelry, door knobs, copper and brass trays and dishes (the tarnish and dirt come off). Indian sari shops. Indian hat makers: velvet bags and belts worked with silver threads. My husband finally said, "Just keep your eyes straight ahead, kid."

Get the seasons right. East Africa has rainy seasons and dry seasons (two of each) instead of winter, summer, etc. During the rainy seasons you cannot move—on safari or on the highways, it's all the same—you're stuck in the mud most of the time. The summer dry season is unreliable, apt to be cool. Go in January, February, March.

Shopping in Kenya is short and sweet. Most of the things are "souvenirs," but I recommend beautiful zebra and crocodile handbags, soft-soled zebra lounging slippers, zebra drums to use as end tables, elephant-hair bracelets and earrings.

Don't worry about languages. All the hotel boys and drivers, etc. speak enough English. But learn, however, two words of Swahili, the local language, to protect yourself from a native custom of the British—early morning tea. This comes to your bedside at dawn, brought by a barefoot boy. If you don't answer his knock, he just keeps knocking. "Hapana" means "No." "Chai" means "Tea." When the boy comes to turn down your bed at night, say, "Tomorrow, Hapana Chai"—and hope for the best!

youngsters react to what seems like a Utopian state of affairs.

Joe came home one evening with a model of King Arthur's court, a striking product of the toymaker's art, so entrancing that Joe hadn't been able to resist it. Rick's eyes sparkled when he saw the miniature knights in armor, the drawbridge and castle, the gaily caparisoned horses. Peggy clapped her hands in glee. They would play with it, she announced. Daddy and mother would be the king and queen and she would be a princess and Rick—. But Ruth broke in gently. She and Daddy had to attend an important meeting tonight. Maybe tomorrow, Peggy.

The next night there was another logical adult excuse. A few days later Joe found the costly toy court tossed into a corner of the nursery closet along with other castoff playthings.

"That toy set me back thirty bucks," he complained to Ruth. "You'd think the kids would show some appreciation for it instead of kicking it around like junk."

But what probably bothered Joe, even though he wasn't altogether conscious of it, was the reproach implicit in the discarded toy. It symbolized the way the children felt about being bought off with showy things, when what they really yearned for was the reassurance of love and acceptance. This, as parents would do well to learn early, can be expressed through active interest in their youngsters' enthusiasms, and only by their own physical presence on the scene to share the fun.

If you want some understanding of what little Peggy and Rick feel, look back into your own childhood. Toys and presents blur in your memory. But the golden moments of play within the family circle—these are the recollections that live, calling forth again the personalities that shared them, and the lessons in living that were learned, unconsciously, through loving human contact.

A friend of mine can recall vividly a checker game he played and lost against his dad. The defeat was swift and crushing and he couldn't restrain his tears. His dad didn't rub it in with stuffy homilies about learning to take it on the chin or bouncing back from a licking with a smile. Instead he showed his son how he had been taken in by one of the oldest traps in checkers, and said something about experience being a tough but effective teacher. He ought to know; he had been humiliated by the same trap himself.

"I learned something that evening," says my friend. "And not only that evening. My folks weren't up on psychology, so it never occurred to them that playing with us children promoted a healthy emotional atmosphere at home and helped prepare us for life. But that's the way it turned out."

A slew of theories on child-raising and improving family relationships has been circulated since my friend was in kneepants. But nothing has shaken this central fact: Sharing good times can do more for the morale and unity of the family and parent-child understanding than any scientific rigmarole. It shows up again and again as one of the important determinants in studies of how well-adjusted children get that way.

ACTUALLY, a tradition of family fun is as much a part of the home-making arts as cooking, shopping, decorating, and the like. It may spring up spontaneously but don't bank on that—not in these days when the pressures of the outside world are so often mistaken for the most important pursuits of our lives. More often than not the building of this tradition calls for time, effort, and patience deliberately allocated—as is illustrated by the way one enterprising mother handled the situation in her home.

This woman's husband was the kind of individual whose interests centered on books, things of the mind, and self-improvement—the type that is known as a culture-vulture. Play, he had made it obvious more than once, was something he expected his two boys to do with other children and not with him.

The mother tried all sorts of ways to get the boys and their father on an easy-going footing but nothing seemed to work. Then one night she noticed her husband reacting delightedly to a television reading by Charles Laughton. It gave her a bright idea.

Right now the need for blood is urgent. In hospitals—at home and overseas—many men require four and six transfusions during delicate operations. And the blood must be there—when it's needed. So give the most precious gift of all—your blood!

Be assured that giving blood is neither difficult nor distressing. And what a thrill there is in knowing that you've performed a really unselfish act! So call your local American Red Cross today and make an appointment. And tell your friends and neighbors about your experience.

That Sunday when they were all together in the house, she brought out a copy of the Wizard of Oz and began to read aloud to the boys. Before long her husband looked up from his newspaper. He put it down, came over, took the book from her and said quietly, "Not like that, darling. Let me show you how it should be read."

Success. After that the readings became regular and eagerly-awaited events. Sometimes the whole family would take turns reading passages from a book. Occasionally they even made an amusing stunt of it by having one person read from a skit or playlet and the others act out the parts in pantomime.

When the mother talks about what happened she doesn't dwell on the taste for the worthwhile that is being instilled in the youngsters. Or the new spirit of good fellowship that warms her home. Her reward came when one of the boys said to her, "You know, Mom. Dad ain't so old," and his brother nodded vigorous agreement.

GIVE her credit, by the way, for avoiding two common mistakes in her anxiety to get some sort of family play relationship going. The first is making a duty of family play. This may pressure Dad into devoting some time to playing with the children, but that kind of play is so lacking in wholeheartedness that it means very little.

The other error is taking a "this will do us all good" tack. Maybe it will. But did you ever hear about Red Skelton's conscientious boy scout who took three hours to get a little old lady across the street? It turned out she simply didn't want to go. What makes an activity cooperative fun for the family is that everyone does want to go along.

Here are a father, mother and three teen-age daughters who pass many enjoyable hours creating their own holiday greeting cards or maintaining a scrapbook of family highlights. And here is a family whose chief enthusiasm is collecting memorabilia dealing with its favorite ball club. In each case the hobby grew naturally out of an interest that touched all members of the family.

The lead for an activity may come from anywhere. Thus, Jason White's young son, Norrie, built a puzzle in the school workshop and brought it home to show the family. Everybody had such a good time with it after dinner and Norrie looked so proud over his accomplishment that it set Jason to thinking. Why not have the family make some of its own games and toys?

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 26th day of September, 1952, Andrew E. Macyko, Notary Public, State of New York, 41-2537-3001 Quad. in Queens Co., Cert. filed with New York County Clerks and Registers. My commission expires March 30, 1953. (Seal.)

Jason had fooled around a little with crafts while in an Army hospital and that helped him get started. Suggestions for things to make and directions for making them came out of books. The youngsters joined in on the planning. First it was games, but then it branched out to other things like a bird-house for the back yard or a decorative shopping reminder for the pantry.

It was more fun than Jason had hoped for—and enlightening besides. He discovered that working along with your children gains you not only a new understanding of them but a fresh insight into your own creative potentialities. He learned, too, that there are few experiences that satisfy a child more than making something with his own hands and using it.

THERE is now in the bookshops a series of "Family Activity" books published by Alfred A. Knopf, Inc., which suggest ways to make family affairs of such diversions as magic and marionettes, stamp collecting and sculpture. There's a book of sewing projects that mother and daughter can share; another book on wood-working for Dad and the boys. These may give you a start.

The beauty of initiating even one family-shared activity, as Jason White and many other parents have found out, is that it gets a let's-have-fun-together habit under way. But the secret of keeping it rolling lies in emphasizing ideas over things, enthusiasm and adventurous curiosity over devices.

I know a house that is a dream palace of play. From the apparatus-filled back yard to the beautifully finished basement with inlaid linoleum shuffleboard court it has everything conducive to play. Everything, that is, except the necessary spirit. The ironic maneuvering that goes on in that house to get away from it and scatter in search of recreation is appalling.

Nobody could find fault, though, with the way that Tom and Rose Lacey and their assorted offspring utilize what they have. Their house is the attached kind and, like most of those being built today, it has no basement and no more rooms than the average family apartment. There isn't a great deal of space for play or enough stretch in the budget to allow for more than the sheer necessities of play equipment. But there is no shortage of imagination.

The will to add to the joy of family living is everywhere evident in the Lacey house. It shows up in the way cubbies and corners have been cleverly converted to play use, in the colorful and eye-pleasing decorations, in the relaxed look of the living room, and in the kidding around that goes on between members of the family.

A neighbor, trying to figure out just what it is that makes the Laceys click as a happy family, expresses it this way: "They're never at a loss for things to do. If the children can't go out because of the weather or sickness, their mother brings out some special things to do she saved for just that.

"They always seem to be planning something together. And no matter what it is, the way they talk about it makes it sound like the most exciting and romantic thing ever. And everything's a big find to them, even a new game of rummy." She shook her head in admiration. "How do they do it?"

Pose that $64 question to them and Tom Lacey and his wife look at one another uncertainly.

"I didn't think there was a trick to it," says Tom finally. "Maybe it's because we act as though we enjoy life. Rose and I, so that the kids just naturally picked it up from us. Like kids will when their parents show them how. Besides, what's the use of having a family if you're not going to take time out to have some laughs together?"

Perhaps that says it all.

Decorate unimportant, difficult spots (here the north wall of the garage) with a few bold plants able to fend for themselves. These are ricepaper plants. Substitutes for cold-winter areas might be big, sprawly old plants of mountain laurel, rhododendron, or viburnum. Use only one kind of plants: mixing always increases upkeep.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY MAYNARD PARKER

Small trees, and even native scrub trees now on the lot, become important decoratively when properly set off—here by eye-catching curves of concrete paving (actually the common territory of terrace, path, and mowing strip). Tree was pruned high to reveal ground pattern.

REBIRTH OF THE FAMILY

files of a family physician or those of an insurance office.

The culture of the family requires time, patience, and fuller participation by all its members; and for its personal sustenance, interest must be awakened on its spiritual side: its history and biography. The antiquarian search for a family tree is too often the lowest snobbism; but the actual planting and cultivating of the family tree is a different matter. That is worthy of everyone's highest skill and immediate attention.

IN America we have a great advantage over the people who lived even 150 years ago. In contrast to them, we are a nation of literates: reading and writing are our minimum accomplishments. So for us the widespread keeping of family records is at least mechanically an easy job: spiritually it will require immense effort, before we pour into the work all the love and skill that it demands. The writing of journals, psychological records, and family histories beginning with the here and now should be one of the most grateful tasks for parents: the gathering of souvenirs, memorabilia, drawings, the recording of anecdotes and stories—all these things will build up that past which will form a bridge, over the most turbid autumnal torrent, to a firmer, finer future.

Some of our young people will lie before their time, fighting barbarian forces or combating famine and plague. Those who survive them in the family will bear the loss more easily if they do not vanish completely, leaving behind only a few fading photographs. The richer the record, the less of them will die. That is the consolation of the writer and the artist when he faces death: let it also be the consolation of parents and children. Life becomes precious again in the family: let us therefore live and relive its best moments: first in action, then in memory.

There are other grounds for creating a book of the family: scientific no less than sentimental. The completer the records of a personal life, the easier it is to retrace mistaken paths, or to put together dispersed fragments. At critical moments in life, before a marriage or a new departure in one's vocation, it is good to go back into the past, in order to have a running start for the leap one must take.

There is nothing that gives depth to life more than such a conscious piling up of experience; nothing that serves as a better guide, in periods of tension and crisis, than a renewal of these sources of one's personal growth. Half of those buried experiences the psychoanalyst seeks to spade up from the compost of rotted memories might be available, in surer form, from the records of the family book. Those are the "true confessions" that would replace the lurid stories devoted to this theme. Such books would of course vary from the most bare and simple annals, done conscientiously but stupidly—and nevertheless valuable in their own degree—to the truly imaginative record in which the novelist and the psychologist would blend their skills to a new task in biography.

THE plea that there is no time for such observation and such record cannot be defended. There is always time for what we think worth doing. People today find time for frequent visits to the motion pictures, endless repetitions of radio broadcasts, and interminable hours of wheeling along glib highways. They are well equipped and ready for any kind of passive, semi-automatic activity; provided it makes no serious demands on them. Our time is our own: to use well or ill. If people were concerned with their personal relations, their love relations, and their family relations as seriously as they are concerned with a more mechanized routine, they would have plenty of time for them. What has been lacking is interest. For the majority of the passing generation, domestic life was just not living.

Yet was it not absurd that our children should grow up without ever knowing their parents even in retrospect? That parents should often involve themselves in heavy labor on behalf of their children, without having the opportunity to participate as sympathetic observers in their growth? The parents themselves miss those precious moments when growth reveals itself in a gesture, an act, or a sudden word; and the child in turn misses the feeling of stability he needs through the mere upright presence of those whom he loves and respects. This task of watchful intercourse cannot be entirely transferred to teachers: though of course there must be something of the parent in every good teacher, as there is something of the teacher in every competent parent.

Here, then, is the very core of a fresh culture: the cultivation of the family. Biological cultivation: care and responsibility in mating; development of the erotic ritual; rational spacing of births; and finally a new joy in fecundity itself, even if the coming of an extra child means the curtailment of some familiar mechanical luxury. The times in which we live will require the strictest asceticism in the purchase of a hundred oddments we once thought essential: even those who can afford motor cars will have to watch their gas. But in compensation, every family that is conscious of itself as a family, conscious of its unity and its destiny, will have an opportunity to enjoy the wealth of the poor: children.

SOCIAL cultivation of the family springs out of this biological root. The old arts of the household, from cooking to good manners; and the new arts of the household, including the exquisite nurture and affectionate observation of the young—these arts will stimulate vital interests and beget more durable joys. They will utilize everyone's emotional and intellectual capacities, up to the limits of his growth.

The family book and the personal record will accompany this nurture: and so people will hand on, first from day to day, and then from generation to generation, the oldest and toughest of human traditions—and the youngest and dearest.

Indoor Plants Easy to Grow in Treated Soil

winter garden hobbyists get
"green thumb" results

ST. LOUIS—Thanks to a great new chemical aid, even inexperienced garden enthusiasts can get satisfying professional results with house plants this winter. Krilium, a Monsanto product now available at garden, hardware, and department stores everywhere, is making news as the only time-tested soil conditioner in existence.

Krilium stabilizes soil in tiny, porous clusters that help store water for gradual absorption. Seeds and bulbs germinate faster . . . Krilium aerates the soil, lets oxygen reach down to plant roots. Easy to handle. Results are apparent immediately in improved soil structure.

Use dirt from your own back yard

No need to buy fancy mixtures. Simply work Krilium into the soil already in your pots, or make new potting soil out of plain back-yard dirt. Krilium will keep the soil crumbly, easily workable, and much more receptive to water.

Nothing like it

Four years of field tests in every soil and climate of the United States have made Krilium the standard against which other conditioning agents are measured. Not a fertilizer, it does not feed crops or plants. You still must give your plants adequate food, water, and sunlight. But in soil treated with Krilium, plants have opportunity for faster, stronger and more fruitful growth.

Two sizes

Buy Krilium at your local dealer's throughout the United States and Canada. Try the new 1-lb. canister for house plants. . . . $1.69 and ground fresh pork, equal parts. For a single pie use two pounds of meat, cooked for 20 minutes on top of the stove with a small, finely chopped onion, and salt and pepper. Thicken with cracker crumbs and season—this is important—add one teaspoon cinnamon, one teaspoon powdered cloves. Really spicy and ever so good, warm or cold, as a main supper or breakfast dish.
Convenient 5-lb. package for indoor and outdoor use—lawns, gardens, shrubs. . . . $6.95

88. Any New Englander will tell you scalloped oysters are a must at holiday time. You've never tasted finer than that which you can make from two packages of quick-frozen oysters, a package of Pepperidge Farm herb-flavored prepared stuffing. Not more than two layers of oysters in a shallow casserole, and don't skimp on butter.

90. To make a Danish pudding sauce or their famed "Rodgrot" dessert take a mix called Danish Junket Pudding Mix. A dash of wine adds distinction.

91. If you have any doubts about what to do about the last hard bits of a fine Virginia ham, grind fine for an omelet or a soufflé. Quicker still, mix with left-over or canned cooked turkey or chicken. Heat in Campbell's condensed cream of chicken soup and serve over split squares of hot corn bread. A little curry? Suit yourself.

92. Most distinguished companions for any fine hash is spoon bread. Through the years we've tried dozens of recipes, ancient and modern. Best is on the box of Quaker Oats yellow corn meal.

93. This idea comes from New Orleans where they serve their coffee after dinner black as night, hot as love, and strong as sin. On each demitasse saucer there is a cinnamon stick for stirring and a teaspoon into which each person puts a lump of sugar, adds brandy, rum, or Grand Marnier, sets the liquor afire. That's Café Diable.

94. Any demitasse is dramatized when you pass a small sectioned dish containing cloves and twists of orange and lemon peel, so that each may spice his coffee to taste.

95. Farmer's Bishop—a hot and gala bowl. Stud an orange with cloves, blaze the orange with brandy in a large ladle; lower the whole thing dramatically into a gleaming punch bowl filled with mulled wine.

96. Holiday Nog, almost too easy to be so good, is made by pouring a pint of whiskey, a cup of rum, and a cup of milk over a pint of vanilla ice cream. Beat with a rotary egg beater until the ice cream is almost melted and the nog is foamy. Then a sprinkle of grated nutmeg?

97. For those who prefer their nog without liquor, the same idea works well with coffee—Sanka, chocolate milk or even just milk.

98. If you haven't discovered Bird's Eye quick-frozen mashed potatoes, you should. Serve them at your dressiest dinner, à la Chantilly, with cheese. Heat according to package directions. Top with a half cup of heavy cream, whipped, one-fourth cup of grated cheese folded into the cream. Pile atop the potatoes. Golden-brown in the oven or under the broiler, and serve immediately.

99. If you want a steamed pudding that's really light, easy and quick, use a gingerbread mix, but don't use all the liquid called for—only about two-thirds. Steam in your pressure cooker 15 minutes and cook 10 minutes at 10-pound pressure.

100. The gleaming copper bowls that hang on your walls are fine for steamed puddings when you use your pressure cooker. Cover them with aluminum foil, or two thicknesses of waxed paper, securely tied with string. Rubber bands don't do so well.

101. For theatrics unlimited, serve Swedish Glögg. There are as many recipes as tribal lays. This one is easy and excellent. Order from Nyborg Nelson in New York or any other truly Swedish shop, a package of what is called "Glögg mixture." Add it to a gallon of red table wine. Heat the wine slowly with the spices, dried fruits, etc. that make up that packet. Comes The Moment, place over hot wine in a copper kettle or heat-proof bowl, a wire mesh. Heap sugar lumps on the mesh, pour on one-half bottle brandy. Flaming sugar drops into the hot, spiced wine. Stir and serve in demitasse cups.
